

Social Services Budget Decrease

Miss Elizabeth W. Hill, director of the Somerset County Department of Social Services, presented their budget requests to the Somerset County Commissioners this week.

Miss Hill said the new budget's total funding request from all sources, federal, state and local, was $1,023,776 less than the current fiscal budget.

The 1974 figure, from all sources is $922,441. The 1973 fiscal year request was $1,025,817.

However, Miss Hill noted that the primary factor in this reduction was a reorganization of services. She told the board that some things formerly handled by the department of social services would be administered by the federal government through the Social Security Administration, beginning January 1, 1974.

Some of these categories are assistance to the blind and certain senior citizen programs.

Miss Hill also noted that spending during the current fiscal year was less than anticipated.

Local funding for the new budget, the county's share, is actually up from $70,502 for 1973 to the $78,179 requested for the 1974 fiscal budget.

Over 80 per cent of this $7,677 increase in local funding request is due to an increase in Somerset County's assessable tax base.

Funding for the county social service departments is formulated by the state.

Somerset County's share for the fiscal 1973 budget was $60,632.

The state formula puts Somerset's share of the 1974 funding at $66,733.

Center Stage Presentation Scheduled

Productions of "The Petrified Forest" and "Mimes and Pantomimes," to be staged at UMES April 23-25, mark the first time in Center Stage's history that it has toured one of its regular maintenance productions, as well as its mime company, from its Baltimore theater to communities in the Middle Atlantic states.

Center Stage is one of two regional theaters to go on tour for the first time this spring to bring professional theater to a much larger group of people than the theater can reach in its hometown.

A group of local businessmen and people interested in cultural activities, led by Edward J. Gollen, Jr., founded Center Stage in 1962. The first production, "La Ronde," opened in January 1963 despite numerous odds, not the least of which included the need for additional financial backing.

In its third season the fledgling theater broadened its scope of activities, and with a $15,000 grant from the State of Maryland, began tours to public senior high schools. The grants have increased to $75,000 annually and some 90,000 Maryland school children are visited yearly by Center Stage, the first regional theater in the nation to launch a comprehensive tour program to schools.

During the third season veteran Baltimore actress, Vivienne Shub, who has earned the distinction of appearing every year in a Center Stage production, began to teach acting classes for the community at Center Stage.

The 1964 innovations were also artistic ones. For the first time, guest directors were brought in to take over four of the season's plays. During this season two actors, John Schuck and Jason Miller, debuted at Center Stage. Schuck later went on to star in the movie, "M*A*S*H," and Miller recently earned fame for writing the current New York hit, "That Championship Season," and winning the role of Father Karras in the film version of "The Exorcist."

This season Center Stage opened with "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," its best production ever critically and financially - every seat for every performance was sold for the first time.

Center Stage was fortunate to have Lane Smith, who appeared as the lead, handle P. McMurphy in "Cuckoo" off-Broadway for the past two years, star in "The Petrified Forest" in the role that made Humphrey Bogart famous. In addition, famed television actor, Edward Bell, will portray the disillusioned writer, Alan Squier the role portrayed by Leslie Howard.

The theater's financial situation, although still a worry at times, was greatly improved by a $320,500 matching grant from the Ford Foundation awarded in 1971.

The future for Center Stage, according to Mr. Culman, calls for expanded tours, a summer workshop for actors, and a new facility for mainstage productions.

RULES ON LOTTERY TICKET SALES

State and local governments looking for ways to raise additional revenue may be interested in serving as sales agents for the Maryland State Lottery.

According to James P. Slicher, director, the attorney general's office has ruled that both State and local subdivisions can handle lottery ticket sales if they are interested.

George H. A. Kommalan, special accounts manager, has scheduled a meeting April 9 with the Mayor and City Council of Cambridge to tell them how the lottery sales program will work.

Ticket agents will receive 5 per cent on each ticket sold. Tickets will be 50c each and it is hoped each sales outlet will sell at least 400 tickets per week. Mr. Kommalan said. Sales agents will be allowed to return unsold tickets by a certain date prior to each week's drawing, he said.

"There is some precedent for local governments handling ticket sales," Mr. Slicher said. "It has come to our attention that in Michigan, the City of Dearborn offers its employees tickets on a payroll deduction plan and sells approximately 2,000 a week."

In effect, the first propellant of the automobile age was gunpowder. Known as black powder, it was used in 1664 to open the country's first deep oil well at Titusville, Penn.

Philadelphia gave Paris its system of paving houses, odd numbers on one side of the street and even on the other. A visiting Frenchman took the idea home with him.

PERSPECTIVES IN LEARNING

By Hazel Brown

Adult Education In This Changing Society

Everyone is feeling the pressures, frustrations, and tensions from trying to cope with the highly organized society of today. There are times when it seems like there is no secure place to hide or no trusting individual who will listen to our concerns. The situation seems to be increasing and we wonder what the outcome will be, and who will take the initiative to offer assistance and guidance.

What role can education play in such a society? Change and newness are the most constant factors that we face and the adult recognizes early that what he felt was progressive as an adolescent is now just history. The education and training the adult received as a teenager in the high school, is now outdated and more technical skills are needed just to keep his job—not considering promotions or advancements.

Adult education must become a vital part of every school system and community if the

The adults in our present society are also feeling the pressures of depersonalization in the midst of crowds of people. At work they are more numbers and find that they have lost their identity as an individual. The fast pace keeps the society moving so that there is very little time to stop and identify individual goals, desires or pleasures. The daily routine isolates people to the extent that it is easy to feel lost and misunderstood.

Adult education classes could be designed to help people cope with this increasing lack of identity. Communities should be considering classes in personal and family adjustment. It seems apparent that the family unit and the church are not meeting the needs satisfactorily so the schools will be called upon to provide the missing link in personal adjustment.

The changes that are occurring will continue to create problems in adult adjustment at the personal level and in job satisfaction, so educators must accept the challenge and begin to develop adult education centers which help to answer these pressing problems.

Question—I have spaces between my upper front teeth. Could this be the result of biting my nails when I was young? What can be done about this spacing?

Answer—There are several possible causes of spacing of your anterior (front) teeth but nail biting is not one of them. The spaces may be there because the teeth erupted that way in a malocclusion (bad bite) in which case some form of orthodontia may be needed to correct the appearance. If you have lost but not replaced posterior teeth a resulting bite collapse may be present. The spacing could be the result of too much force on the backs of the upper front teeth causing the teeth to flare out thus creating spaces between them. In this case the correct bite must first be re-established and then the teeth moved with a light force from an orthodontic appliance.

Periodontal disease with its resulting loss of support of the teeth can result in spreading of the teeth and spaces. Treatment of the periodontal (gum) condition is necessary before the teeth can be moved back together.

When teeth are lost and not replaced, the teeth on either or both sides of the space will often tilt, rotate or otherwise move towards the space in an attempt to compensate for the lost member and fill the vacant area. This will result in spaces between the teeth.

So, first the cause must be determined and treated if necessary. Then and only then can the teeth be moved back together. If the teeth are moved without correcting the cause, the spaces will recur.

Question—I have 4 teeth that have had root canals done, 3 lower and 1 upper, all in the front. All four are turning dark. Should I have them out, I don't like their looks.

Answer—If the teeth that have had root canal treatment are otherwise healthy, they may not have to be removed as it may be possible to crown (cap) them thus restoring their appearance as well as protecting them from breaking. It is not unusual for root canal treated teeth to become darker grayish in appearance. Sometimes such teeth can be bleached lighter but this is usually only transient as they will become dark again. Since root canal treated teeth are much more easily fractured (broken) than non root canal treated teeth, it is usually best to crown them.

The Dr. Fatkins Diet

By RALPH NOVAK

NEW YORK (CEP)

The latest entry in the current weight-reducing craze is the Dr. Fatkins' Banana Split and Cheesecake Diet. In his new book, "Gorging Your Way to Skinnyhood," Fatkins promises that his diet will allow any overweight person to lose 97 pounds the first week, 52 pounds the second week and 23 pounds every week thereafter, providing the rules are strictly followed.

The Fatkins diet calls for one banana split and a half pound of cheesecake for breakfast, the same for lunch, and two banana splits and a pound of cheesecake for dinner.

"Absolutely no eating between meals, of course," Fatkins said in a recent interview. "Use only real whipped cream, gooey syrup and plenty of nuts on the banana splits. And all junk foods—milk, liver, vegetables and that kind of stuff—should be 100 per cent taboo."

"I do recommend, however, that once every three weeks a dieter have a one-day splurge when he can eat lettuce and carrot sticks and cottage cheese so he'll get all those bad impulses out of his system."

The original version of Fatkins' diet included chocolate bars but he found that while the chocolate helped in weight loss, it also made most people's skin break out, which meant that instead of being fat and happy but unpopular, most of his patients became skinny and sad but unpopular.

"My diet treats the whole person, not just his fat," Fatkins commented. "My experiments have shown that if the whole world followed my diet, there would be no more wars or bickering or even nasty letters to the editor, just a kind of benign stupor."

Fatkins' book—which was commissioned by the National Banana Foundation and the American Cheese Council—has sold 117 million copies in the three weeks it has been available and he is already planning a sequel.

"For those who find that banana splits and cheesecake just seem to make them fatter—and who knows how many that might be," he said, guffawing, "I'm going to come up with a milk shake, pork fat and doughnut diet."

Most medical authorities have described the Fatkins diet in such terms as "national catastrophe," "Communist plot," and "the worst thing since the black plague" but Fatkins scoffs at their criticism.

"It is true, of course, that 37 per cent of the people who follow my diet for more than 10 days find that their ears begin to fall off," he said. "But if that's the worst thing that ever happens to them, they'll be all right. And any-ry few ounces helps."

Ministers Session For Jehovah Witness

"Peace and any other benefits nations today might arrange will only be temporary. Jehovah God is the great ruler of the universe," was the message W. L. Van De Wall told 800 assembled ministers at the Wicomico Junior High School Sunday. His discourse was the highlight of a two-day training session arranged by the Watchtower Bible Society for Jehovah's Witnesses and their friends.

Van De Wall, traveling supervisor of the group, started by saying: "Rulership is of worldwide concern as evidenced by the attention devoted to politics in the newspapers and the lengths some people go to in an effort to influence or replace rulers." He urged his audience "to personally overcome any racial or national prejudice, knowing that rising tensions in the world require us to work at it constantly." As Van De Wall put it, "Christians must demonstrate their love for God and fellowman in a way that involves the whole range of one's life." In concluding, Van De Wall reminded his audience, "While we remain respectful of rulers and are law-abiding, we must maintain loyalty to the Ruler of the universe."

On Saturday 20 new ministers were baptized as a symbol of dedication of their life to service of God.

Clariton Matthews, presiding minister for the Westover congregation, reported that area ministers will be implementing suggestions given at the seminar into their regular ministry, as a means of improving their own ministry. He stated that meetings at the Kingdom Hall will resume their normal schedule.

Christian Science

How Do You Know God Exists? Once you have felt His guidance and healing power in your life, you know.

People who have been helped and healed through understanding God's presence share their experiences at our Wednesday meetings. They tell how Christianity has become a practical, operative force in their lives.

There are thoughtful readings from the Bible and from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. The Wednesday meetings are held at First Church of Christ, Scientist, Salisbury, on the corner of Smith Street and South Blvd. at 8:00 P. M.

As you listen, you begin to see that God is real, that He loves you, that His power can be felt in your life.

You're always welcome.

CARD OF THANKS

Notes From Garden Club

Did you know . . .
1) That the Italian favorite oregano is majoram in English? (World Book)

2) That oregano - herb bread is a favorite treat with herb-gardener cooks who dislike garlic?

3) That a pint of cider vinegar if poured into a clean jar over a scant tsp. of crumbled tarragon leaves and set in the sun with a cover on will "sun brew" your own tarragon vinegar for tasty salads?

4) That a homemade mint julep as an occasional treat for that special occasions is not too much trouble with a good recipe:

Muddle two sprigs of mint from your own herb garden with 1 tsp. fine sugar and 1 tsp. water. Tamp mint leaves to extract flavor and then add crushed ice to julep glass; add 1 jigger Kentucky Bourbon and stir. Add enough crushed ice to fill glass. Add additional bourbon to bring liquid level to the top of the glass. Mix gently. Use sprig of mint as garnish and serve in hot weather with

5) Mint syrup can be homemade and stored in a clean jar for use as needed: gently boil for one minute equal parts of water and sugar and generous sprigs of mint. Strain into jar. This is delicious over puddings, ice milk for dieters or ice cream for growing children. One tablespoon will flavor your Mint Julep.

Did you know that our Somerset County Garden Club was founded in September 1961 and has at the present time seventy four members and is happy to welcome newcomers.

The coming celebration of Spring is the Eighth Annual Daffodil Show sponsored by our county Garden Club at the Bank of Somerset in our County Seat, Princess Anne, Saturday, April 7th from 1 to 7 P.M. Open to the public and welcome.

Where Is Your Treasure?

by Carl Hoffman

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth . . . but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." These words are from Christ as He continues His sermon on the mount in Matthew 6:19-21. Having warned us against coveting the praise of men, He now proceeds to warn us against coveting the wealth of this world.

This is an excellent caution against placing too much emphasis on the temporal or material things of life. When we place our lives in Christ, our hope no longer resides in the things of this world. For the material things pass and fade away. The moth corrupts them, and the rust devours them. Thieves can steal them from us. Let us not place trust in cash which is only a promissory bill of exchange. Nor should our confidence rest in a currency which is victim to inflation and devaluation. These things are transient, offering only temporary hope. We need to turn to the only lasting hope, the Hope of the Ages: Jesus Christ.

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." If your treasure is in material things, then our heart belongs to the same. But if we lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven, our heart belongs to God, secured by an eternal hope which cannot be marred by the moth, by the rust, nor by the thief. My hope is built on nothing less Than Jesus' blood and righteousness. I dare not trust the sweetest frame But wholly lean on Jesus name. On Christ the solid Rock I All other ground is sinking sand stand;

Consumer Hints For Carpet Buys

Next to a color television console or refrigerator, wall-to-wall carpeting for an average-sized living room is probably one of the most expensive replacement items purchased by the average homeowner or apartment-dweller.

So, if you're in the market for a new carpet, it will pay you to consider one in line with your family situation and needs, according to Elizabeth Langsdale, Extension home furnishing specialist at the University of Maryland in College Park. It takes more than color, size and cost to constitute a good buy, Miss Langsdale noted in a recent interview. With the many kinds of carpet available, you should be able to find one which will suit your home and family best.

First consider your family situation. Do you really need a new rug, or do you just want one? Will you be moving soon, or will the size of your family be changing. Are your children careful, or are they apt to spill things? Are your pets well trained? Is your life-style formal, informal or changing.

To what type of soil and traffic will your rug be exposed? How long do you expect your rug to last? Will your new rug require new padding? How much can you afford to spend for a new rug or carpet?

Miss Langsdale suggests that you consider carpet design and construction next. What do you expect a new rug or carpet to do for your home? Will it add beauty and warmth, cut down on noise or provide safety? Will you be changing the furnishings or color scheme soon? Which colors would look best?

What type of rug might best serve your family needs—area, room-size or wall-to-wall? Do you want a texture that is smooth, semi-rough, rough or shaggy to match present or expected furnishings? Does your rug need to lighten the room, darken it, or add a feeling of more space? Will the new rug complement or detract from your furnishings?

Before purchasing a new carpet or rug, find out what specific care it needs. Do you have the time and energy to care for it? Will professional cleaning be needed? If so, is it conveniently available, and how expensive will it be? Do you have the proper cleaning equipment, or will you have to purchase it?

After you have faced up to these questions, you should be in a position to deal intelligently with a carpet salesman. He can sell you anything from an economy "Volkswagen" nylon rug at $3.50 to $8 per square yard up to a "Cadillac" domestic wool blend rug at $18 to $20 per square yard.

In between are standard "Chevrolet" and "Ford" medium-priced polyester and acrylic carpets in a range from $5 or $6 up to $13 per square yard.

A salesman for a major carpet dealer in the metropolitan Washington, D. C. area noted that, as a rule-of-thumb, rugs selling at $10 to $11 per square yard and up can be expected to last one year for every dollar per square yard invested.

This generalization is based on normal wear and care with a family of four. Cheaper rugs, however, will not meet this test, he warned.

CANCELLED Rotary Speaker

The Arthur Judson Management of New York City has announced the cancellation of the scheduled performance of the Manhattan Trio on Thursday, April 5, 1973, at the University of Maryland, Eastern Shore.

The management stated that the cancellation was due to an elbow injury of one of the players. The University regrets the cancellation and hopes to reschedule the group in the future.

Samuel Adkins, manager of the A&P Store here, was the guest speaker at the regular meeting of the Princess Anne Rotary Club Tuesday evening at the Mt. Vernon Inn.

Mr. Adkins, a collector of paper money, displayed an exhibit of national authorized paper money issued on the Delmarva Peninsula by national banks. The authorization of local banks to issue money was terminated in 1935.

Something to Think About...
By James L. Hinman

There's a new word being tossed around; its "acupuncture." There's still much mystery surrounding this ancient Chinese healing art, but considerable interest concerning it is being generated in this country. Some Americans have traveled to Taipei, Taiwan, in search of treatment at the Chinese acupuncture clinic of Dr. Wu Wei-Ping. Some have come back with enthusiastic testimonials of the curative powers of his treatment by puncturing body surfaces with needles.

For diagnostic information, Dr. Wu Wei-Ping feels the patient's pulse. From this, he says he can accurately determine the source of the problem. He then inserts needles at certain body points. Heat, and a twirling motion is later applied to the needles. This is supposed to stimulate, by way of the nervous system, the recuperative powers of the body so that the malfunctioning parts of organs are restored to health.

We doubt very much that Dr. Wu Wei-Ping could do anything for a person needing cataract surgery, or one suffering serious organic disease. But for a person suffering a psychosomatic induced illness, it might work as well as hypnosis which has been used in this country. As for now, we think we will continue to rely on a licensed physician for management of our medical problems. If there is something to be learned from acupuncture, we are confident that our medical people will explore it thoroughly.

THERE'S A WORLD OF ADVENTURE IN A FLOWER SEED DISPLAY

It was the Spanish Conquistadors who first discovered marigolds growing in South America, and the picture above shows a magnificent display growing in a Spanish mission.

New seed displays are brightening up stores across the country — and some fascinating stories surround the origins of many of the flower seed varieties on display.

Most have been discovered by plant explorers who risked life and limb in strange countries in their search for new flowers to beautify our gardens. Indeed, the greatest voyage of discovery before man went to the moon was sponsored by a botanist, Sir Joseph Banks, who 200 years ago financed the expeditions of Captain James Cook, which resulted in the discovery of New Zealand, Hawaii and Alaska.

More modest plant expeditions are in progress today, and since 1956 the United States Department of Agriculture has sent 13 plant expeditions around the world.

China has been a rich source of new flowers, including hollyhocks, oriental poppies and asters. Africa has yielded carnations and snapdragons, while Europe gave us sweet peas, foxgloves, and Shirley poppies. From South America came nasturtiums, petunias, morning glories, scarlet sage, portulaca and verbenas, while in Mexico the Spanish Conquistadors first set eyes on ageratum, zinnias, marigolds, cosmos and dahlias.

Native American plants include the sunflower (now a vital part of Russia's economy on account of its vitamin-rich, oil-producing seeds), the columbine, gloriosa daisies, phlox and California poppies.

All these popular garden flowers are very easy-to-grow, and can be found in most seed displays in your local store. Take a new look at the beautiful array, and bring a world of beauty into your garden this year.

The sailfish is a prized game and food fish, related to the swordfish and marlin, and is named for its high dorsal fin which simulates the appearance of a ship under sail. The largest Pacific sailfish caught by rod and reel was 10 feet, 9 inches long and weighed 221 pounds.

High Living

La Paz, the administrative capital of Bolivia, is the world's highest capital at an altitude of about 11,800 feet. Among high U.S. cities are Santa Fe, N.M., 6,950 feet, and Cheyenne, Wyo., 6,100 feet. Denver, Colo., is called the "Mile High City" and is exactly one mile above sea level.

Heart Attack! Silent Epidemic

It is estimated that more than 670,000 men and women will die of heart attack this year. This staggering number of fatalities is more than the individual population of half a dozen different states.

What is especially shocking is that more than half, or 250,000, of these fatalities will occur outside the hospital.

But what is even more discouraging about these out-of-hospital deaths is that many of these men and women have "hearts too good to die." These are the heart attack victims that physicians predict could survive if they would act quickly to receive specialized hospital coronary care.

What can be done to prevent these needless deaths?

The answer is simple. People must learn to recognize and accept the warning signs of heart attack when they appear and take immediate steps to receive medical attention.

When heart attack occurs, according to your Heart Association, these are the usual warning signs or symptoms:

*A prolonged heavy pressure or squeezing pain in the center of the chest behind the breastbone.

*The pain may also spread to the arms, shoulder, neck or jaw.

The pain or discomfort is often accompanied by sweating, nausea, vomiting, and shortness of breath may occur.

Sometimes these symptoms may subside and then return.

Studies in leading hospitals where heart attack victims were admitted to coronary care units reveal that the patients convinced themselves at the onset of symptoms that they were suffering from "indigestion," "stomach-aches" and a variety of other minor complaints.

No attempt was made by these patients to seek medical care until pain was so severe, that despite protests, a wife, relative or friend intervened and either called the family physician, or got the sufferer to the hospital as fast as possible.

This delay in seeking treatment after symptoms appear is crucial, for the first few hours after heart attack is the critical period when sudden death is most likely to occur.

The most common complication that follows deprivation of an adequate supply of oxygen-bearing blood to the heart is ventricular fibrillation. This is where the muscle fibers of the heart contract incoordinately and the blood-pumping ability of the heart fails. Unless the victim receives immediate treatment, sudden death occurs.

The results of delay in heeding the warning signs of heart attack can be read in the mortality statistics of men and women who fail to get immediate medical treatment.

It is estimated that if all heart attack victims who survive just a few hours were to receive specialized treatment in a hospital coronary care unit, then the annual heart attack fatalities could be reduced by up to 50,000 lives.

For more information, ask your Heart Association to send you its latest publications on "Heart Attack."

Seeks Golden Age Involvement

Mrs. Philomena Bradford, Director of the MAC Multi-Service Center, recently announced her pleasure at the turnout and obvious success the program is having with the senior citizens of Somerset County. In making the announcement, Mrs. Bradford expressed a great desire to have even more of the county's golden age residents to become involved with the many activities offered by the center including an outreach service designed to aid those unable to attend the center. The center also supplies information and referrals for services Somerset's Senior Citizens may need.

The activities, conducted in the center, located at the Strawberry Block, Princess Anne, Md., include various classes in crafts (flower arranging, knitting, etc.) which are handled by the Adult Education Service in the county. Also there are various films, field trips and extension service offerings in areas such as Social Security and Internal Revenue. There is, in addition, a monthly birthday party honoring all participants born during that month.

Anyone over the age of 60 who would like to obtain more information, should call Mrs. Bradford at 651-3517 or better yet, why not go out at your own convenience and enjoy the socializing.

The Maintenance of the Aged in the Community (MAC) is a pilot program in the Lower Shore Counties (Dorchester, Wicomico, Somerset, Worcester) due to their densities of population in the over 60 category. The philosophy of the program is simply to try and keep older people in their own home cutting down on wholesale institutionalization. MAC is sponsored by the Maryland Commission on the Aged.

Though an erupting volcano brings to mind pictures of flowing rivers of boiling lava, not all active volcanoes emit lava, the National Geographic Society says. Mount Tall in the Philippines, with a history of death and destruction, has spewed forth noxious gases, steaming mud and ash, and white-hot rocks—but never lava.

Twenty-six years ago Holly-wood actress Dorothy Lamour talked the man who was to become the first pilot for the Maryland State Police into a career in Law enforcement. Today Captain Robert Y. Wolfe of Edgewater heads the State Police Aviation Division and commands a force of 33 men who are best known for their lifesaving air evacuation program operated with the Maryland Emergency Medical Institute which was formerly known as the University of Maryland Shock Trauma Center.

Born and raised in Hagerstown, Wolfe enrolled in a flight training program as a young man. Mastering the fundamentals, he gained his commercial license and flight instructor's rating through the Civilian Pilot Training Program of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the forerunner of today's F.A.A.

From 1942 to '46 he flew DC-3's as co-pilot for Trans-Continental and Western Air, Inc., nicknamed the "Lindbergh Line", and now known as TWA. At the close of the war Wolfe flew for several non-scheduled air lines and returned to Maryland to work at the Sparrows Point Plant of Bethlehem Steel.

Enter Dorothy Lamour, glamorous and often sarong-clad siren of Hollywood fame. Co-operating with the Maryland State Police in a 1947 statewide recruiting drive, Miss Lamour made radio public service announcements which successfully recruited among others the young pilot Robert Wolfe.

In 1953 when the State Police acquired their first plane, a World War II observation craft, Trooper Wolfe was assigned as the first pilot, in addition to his other duties. In 1954 he maintained aerial surveillance during the visit of Queen Mother Elizabeth of England, an assignment for which he was commended by Governor Theodore R. McKeldin.

In 1955, the aging plane was replaced with a Cessna 180 and Wolfe again received praise for maintaining an aerial command post during a cold March night in 1956 when "The Embassy" train wreck in Odenton killed six persons and injured many others.

The Cessna was traded in 1961 for a two man helicopter and a Piper Aztec which brought the Aviation Section of the State Police into full fledged operation. Wolfe, now a First Sergeant, was placed in charge of the three-man unit.

After seven years with the Aviation Section, Wolfe was promoted to other administrative positions serving as barracks commander for the Kennedy Highway (1968-'70) and as Annapolis barracks commander. Last month he returned to the unit he helped establish as Captain in charge of the Aviation Division - with an inventory of three jet-powered helicopters and a twin engine airplane.

In addition to traffic control and normal police operations, the helicopters provide high-speed transportation to the Maryland Emergency Medical Institute in Baltimore for critically injured and seriously ill persons. With a top speed of 150 miles per hour, each chopper can fly two litter patients to University Hospital, for example, from the Maryland-Pennsylvania line in less than 10 minutes. Captain Wolfe plans to expand the medivac program into Western Maryland and the Eastern Shore on a full-time 24 hour a day basis as soon as the necessary helicopters and crews can be acquired.

He and Emergency Medical Institute Director R Adams Cowley are pleased with the results of the cooperative program which gives severely injured Marylanders quick access to the medical tools for survival. Cowley says, "With severe multiple injuries, you live or die depending on how rapidly you are picked up and transported to a facility where there are adequate personnel and equipment to care for you immediately on arrival." Capt. Wolfe adds, "We are getting national recognition for the program, but most important, we are saving lives . . . many lives."

Few spiders live more than two years, and the males, who die soon after mating, rarely survive even one. National Geo-

The Impact Of Federal Aid

Federal aid has become an increasingly significant factor in the finances of all levels of government, rising from 8.6 per cent of total Federal outlays in 1964 to an estimated 16.7 per cent in 1974. In terms of civilian domestic programs, 24.8 per cent of 1974 Federal outlays will take the form of aids to State and local governments. The effect on State and local expenditures has not been quite as marked, since their expenditures have been rising at a much faster rate than Federal outlays. Nevertheless, Federal aid has risen as a proportion of State and local expenditures from 13.5 per cent in 1960 to an estimated 21.3 per cent in 1974.

State and local spending has been substantially influenced by those Federal grants that require the recipient government to match. Federal aid funds, with its own resources and by demands that certain organizations be created and maintained. In the last few years, State and local governments have had to allocate about 10 per cent of their own revenue to match Federal grant moneys. The elimination of most matching requirements for the programs replaced by special revenue sharing will reduce this, and free State and local resources for high-priority use as the State and local governments choose.

Federal aid varies widely among regions, ranging in 1971 from a high of $178 per capita in the Rocky Mountain region to a low of $102 per capita in the Great Lakes area. There are often substantial differences even among States in the same region. Some of the variation can be attributed to differentials in per capita income and population density.

There are two reasons for the relationship between income and Federal aid. Some grant programs require lower matching ratios for the poorer States. Other programs, such as those for public assistance and elementary and secondary education, are designed as aids to the disadvantaged and tend to flow to States having proportionately more individuals with lower incomes.

The effect of population density is especially evident in the thinly populated Western States where highway construction grants and shared revenues from Federal land holdings greatly increase levels of per capita aid. For example, the Rocky Mountain region has the lowest regional population density, extensive Federal land holdings and the highest per capita aid.

Within these totals, however, an important qualitative shift is taking place—the increasing emphasis on urban areas. The American population is becoming increasingly urban, today, about 70% of the population lives in the 269 standard metropolitan statistical areas (SMSA's). SMSA's include the bulk of that urban population which places heavy pressure on public service requirements — areas where population growth and population density are high. $3.14 billion or 70 per cent of Federal grants will be either spent in or directly affect these SMSA's in 1974. This is an increase of $25.8 billion, or nearly 460 per cent more than the level provided to these urban areas in 1964.

Church Seeks Day Care Child

The First Baptist Church of Princess Anne is attempting to survey the local community to locate prospective enrollees for their Christian Day Care Center. Organization of the center has been approved in the church's business session. The center is at present in the planning stages.

The center when organized will be able to accommodate twenty children ages 2-6. Children will be accepted for full or part-time session. Costs will be in line with current local rates for child care.

Sessions will be held at the church's facilities and will provide lunch and two snacks. The aim of the center will be to provide good physical, mental, emotional and spiritual care for the children enrolled. Study of the Bible will be a part of the curriculum, but there will be no restriction regarding the religious affiliation of children accepted.

Parents who consider using the center are urged to contact Mrs. Dora Ann Ring, phone 651-0857 to indicate their interest. Community participation is needed in order to make the center successful.

SOMERSET COUNTY . . . IN THE SPRINGTIME.

The gentle warmth of the seasons first light southerly wind begins to stir the populace. The salty tang in the air, the cry of the herring gull, and the unmistakable odor of tarred nets heralds another Spring in Somerset. Little boys dig out their crab-nets, strip off their shirts and shoes and sneak off in quest of the seasons first crustaceans. Grown men become busy repairing their shanties, building their floats and readying their boats in anticipation of another record crabbing and fishing season.

For many generations the Bank of Somerset has annually watched the birth of Spring in Somerset County. It is an exhilarating and busy season, a time of year when the adage "Hope springs eternal in the human breast" seems to take on added meaning. For us at the Bank of Somerset it is also a time of reflection, a reflection on the past, present, and future. On the past with its nostalgic memories of those who chose our bank and helped it build a firm foundation. On the present with our many fine customers who are helping us grow into a tower of banking strength, and with joyous anticipation of the future in serving those who are yet to come.

Have you tried the Bank of Somerset yet? If not, why not stop into one of our three offices in Princess Anne or Crisfield. You will discover for yourself why so many are turning to us for all their banking needs. Bank of Somerset . . . We've got a lot to like.

CUTTING BACK ON SOCIAL PROGRAMS?

Ever since the President in his State of the Nation address announced that many poverty programs would be transferred to Health, Education and Welfare, newspapers have given publicity to almost any individual or politician that takes to the public forum to say that this or that "War on Poverty" or Office of Equal Opportunity program is endangered.

Of course, any reader knows that the Community Action concept has been eliminated, but worthwhile programs have been transferred to HEW administration.

No worthwhile program is expected to be eliminated but local government will administer those considered essential not covered by HEW. To do this States, Counties and Municipals are being sent revenue sharing funds to finance the good ones.

Closely following the President's message the New York Times (a newspaper not considered too friendly with the Republican Administration) deplored his proposals for domestic spending, especially as regards "social programs". What it amounts to, the Times said, is a reversion to the do-nothing federal government and an every man for himself ideology of the Hoover era, "back when, it will be recalled, life in America was solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short."

This statement prompted a Times reader (Paul Manheim) to observe: "I see from the budget figures, which the Times commendably also published, that the total of such expenditures amounted to $100 billion last year, that they are being cut back to $109 billion this year, and that Nixon now proposes they be cut further next year to $122 billion. If such cutbacks continue, it won't be long before they are down to $200 billion.

The point is that social programs will not be cut, but the funds will more likely be spent as they are intended and not be consumed in costly administration.

SALARY DISCLOSURE

The public is entitled to know the name of every person on the public payroll and the salary earned.

That's elementary, isn't it? Why, of course it is.

But it is a principle that must be defended again and again. Just when it seems to be well established, some misguided public official comes along to question the right of taxpayers to know how their tax money is being spent.

The latest case involves the payroll of the public school system in Allegany County. Dr. James A. Semsbaugh, state superintendent of schools, has written a letter to Allegany officials telling them that they need not make public the names and salaries of their employees.

Dr. Semsbaugh takes the position that names and salaries are part of employee personnel files and therefore are privileged information.

What hogwash! Maryland's Freedom of Information Act says otherwise, according to an examination of the law by the office of Atty. Gen. Francis E. Burch. The opinion by Mr. Burch's office was shanded down last year following an attempt by the University of Maryland at College Park to hide salary information. If Dr. Semsbaugh has managed to find some other loophole in the law, and is using that loophole as the basis for his advice to Allegany County officials, the legislature should act to close it off. When someone goes on the public payroll, he should be prepared to have his salary revealed. That goes for everyone from the governor on down to public school teachers in Allegany County. —Baltimore News American

THE MOST DEADLY POWER

In the first half of the 20th century, Roger Babson was recognized nationally as one of the most knowledgeable journalist-commentators in America. His column on national affairs and economic wadoubtedly had the largest audience of any journalist of his day. Babson, who lived in Massachusetts, was constantly warning about the concentration of power exercised in the New York - Boston - Washington "axis" over the lives of all Americans. He had a geodetic survey made which found that the exact center of the United States was at a point in eastern Kansas, and he proposed that it become the hub for the center of all phases of American life.

Babson drew a circle around the hub, encompassing all the central geography of the U.S.A. and called it "The Magic Circle" for America's future. Other circles radiated out to encompass the whole nation. At the time of his death years later, however, the eastern axis concentration of power over life in America had grown and was being used with almost unchallenged arrogance. Radio, which hadn't become well-established in Babson's last years, and Television, which hadn't been developed, have in the last 20 years consolidated their powers predominantly in New York City.

Monopoly in Opinion-Shaping Theodore H. White, nationally-known journalist, author of "The Making of the President" books, recently expressed his fear about the concentration of power in New York City over communications. "You can take a compass with a one-mile radius and put it down at the corner of Fifth Avenue and 51st Street in New York," he said, "and you have a control of 95 percent of the entire opinion and influence-making in the U.S.A."

This would not be a healthy situation even if all shades of opinion about all problems and issues in America were represented in the handling of news disseminated from New York. A great mass of documented evidence is accumulating which shows that one ideological viewpoint — the Left "liberal" — is dominating in all types of communications being beamed from New York to the nation as "news" and "information." This would indicate that a one-sided report of "news" may be used in an effort to shape the thinking and actions of our 200-million citizens

Critics Heard

Prominent, respected, working journalists have now publicly made charges of a "togetherness" bias and unethical "advocacy journalism" in news handling by the three major television networks centered in New York, by some of the major metropolitan newspapers and nationwide news agencies operating out of Manhattan offices and in Washington, and by some of the "stars" of today's syndicated and electronic journalism. Those who have criticized the journalist "brotherhood" for bias and advocacy in news handling include the nationally-circulated columnist Robert D. Novak; James Borman, News Director of WOOO-TV, Minneapolis, who is past-president of the Radio-TV News Directors Association of America; Edith Efron, contributing editor of TV Guide; Frank Shakespeare, former Vice President of CBS-TV in charge of News; James Keogh, former Executive Editor of TIME Magazine; Howard K. Smith, ABC-TV Washington anchor-man, and many, many others.

When you add money power and political power to the communications power you have the full picture that worried Babson and continues to worry leaders in all phases of American life. Financial power resides in the great banking houses of New York and the money influence flowing out of these reaches into nearly every financial institution in America coast to coast. It is reported by astute observers that interests in New York have wielded dominate influence in the selection of many of the Presidential candidates of both major parties; and New York institutions, it is said, have wielded great and abnormal potency in the type of campaigns carried on.

Power Corrupts

This isn't meant to suggest that evil abides in the minds and hearts of all people rising to command great power. But it does suggest the possibility of corruption in some places. Lord Acton's keen observation of a half century ago still is valid:

"Power tends to corrupt; absolute power corrupts absolutely."

We are going to speak out about this concentration of power — in subsequent columns, newsletters and in our nationwide radio program, Behind the News. We have programmed our April Freedom Forum (April 19-20) to present national leaders speaking on the theme: "The Responsibilities of the News Media in a Free Society." Of the three major earthly sources of power — money, political, communications — the power to control information going to the people, and the power to contaminate information with advocacy are the most deadly to human liberty. Hitler and Stalin dramatically proved this point.

Home Is Where the Hurt Is

Donna Anne Stern died at the age of 9. Her life was an agony. Her death became a cause.

When Donna was pronounced dead last May in Montgomery County, her body was covered with severe burns and bruises inflicted over a long period of time. After hearing of such atrocities as Donna being bathed in Clorox and scrubbed with steel wool, a jury found her mother sane, and guilty, of her death. The father is still facing trial.

As shocking as this was, the word used by the police investigator was even more alarming. He called the case "typical."

The polite phrase is "child abuse." Medical people call it the "battered child syndrome." What it means is that parents repeatedly beat and torture their children and in many cases, while society looks the other way, kill them.

The Stern case stimulated a new round of legislation in Maryland and in Congress aimed at a startling fact: long before these children died, people knew what was happening but they didn't — or couldn't — do anything about it. The issue has finally reached proportions nobody can ignore. There are cases before local and state courts and on various administrative levels.

Through the publicity surrounding the Stern case, legislators have been appalled to realize that back in their own home towns there may be victims like Donna known to local officials, who do nothing. With Donna's scarred and bruised body fresh in their minds, a 3-month-old tot named Sabrina Lynn Ward died of a blow to the head. She had been taken away from her parents by a judge because of neglect, then returned to them by Social Services workers without his consent.

These cases made headlines, but many do not. In fact, there were 584 reported incidents of child abuse in Maryland in 1971 — the last year statistics are available — including four in Somerset County. Of the total, abuse was eventually ruled out in 186 cases. But how many cases were not reported is anybody's guess.

CUT, KICKED, STARVED

The injuries include bruises and welts, punctures and cuts, burns and scalds, and broken bones like skull fractures. Typically, weapons include boards, paddles, rubber hoses, curtain rods and extension cords. Some were kicked. Some were thrown around. Some were tied or locked up. Many were starved. Some were even sexually abused.

Who was responsible. Usually both parents, and they can be of all ages, from all backgrounds, incomes and lifestyles — rural, urban and suburban — and they are all under some kind of emotional stress that could be cured if caught in time.

One common denominator, which shows that this is not just a product of modern times, is that most of the child beaters had been abused by their parents.

But the greater tragedy is that in so many cases other people — neighbors, teachers, even doctors — are aware of what is going on, but keep quiet. Many don't want to get involved with the police. Or, they reason, a man's home is his castle, and everyone has the right to punish his own child, doesn't he?

REPORTS REQUIRED

One of this year's bills recognizes the aversion to police reports by taking child abuse out of the criminal code, where it is a felony, and putting it in the Social Services section. Sen. J. Joseph Curran's bill, introduced for the department, also requires educators, law officers, doctors and nurses to report suspected cases.

And a third bill introduced by Sen. Crawford recalls the Alphonse-Gaston aspect of the Stern case and gives welfare workers the authority to enter the home when abuse is confirmed and remove the child immediately. And Sen. Crawford has also called for an intensive survey of the State's child abuse problem.

So the subdivisions, and the State, have been forewarned to put some muscle into the reporting systems by the Congressional hearings now under way. Sen. Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota has promised a bill requiring the states to draw up comprehensive plans for prevention and treatment.

And he wants to create a National Center of Child Abuse and Neglect as a clearing house and research center to learn why these innocent victims must fall prey to this most tragic of crimes.

We can only imagine how many times in her short and tragic life Donna Anne Stern cried out in agony.

Perhaps now she has been heard.

COMING UP

The Session ends April 9, but as legislators rush home they'll be planning to return for a special session probably starting July 30 to enact revised natural resources and criminal codes that committees have been working on for years. . . April 8 is the day youths and adults will be riding bikes for the retarded. The pledges they got for their mileage will benefit 130,000 retarded Marylanders. Information from the Association for Retarded Children, 356-3410. . . There are still 26 relatives of Marylanders still missing in Southeast Asia. Bracelets bearing their names are available from Mrs. Donald Shay, 206 Hilltop Rd., Linthicum 21090 (789-6136). Jaycees have posters bearing pictures of local men to display as reminders.

FAMILY LIVING NOTES

Follow the 2Guide to Good Eating". Make sure you plan meals that include all the vitamins, minerals, carbohydrates, fat and protein needed everyday.

The most important foods have been divided into four groups. "Guide to Good Eating" is an important leaflet that will help you choose foods wisely. If you follow the guide it will help you choose foods, plan meals and see that they supply different nutrients.

The food groups are: Meat Group—including meat, poultry, fish and eggs. These often come first in meal planning. Plan for two or more servings each day of these.

Cereals and Bread are another group. These are foods for pep and good suppliers of carbohydrates.

Fruits and vegetables are more effective than a shelf full of cosmetics. Enjoy treats of celery, carrots and leafy greens. Four or more servings are needed from this group.

Everyone in the family needs milk. Four glasses for the children and two or more for adults. You can enjoy whole or skim milk, ice cream. Sometimes serve one inch cube of cheddar cheese or 2 1/2 cup of ice cream instead of 1 1/2 glass of milk.

The way foods are teamed makes a big difference. Certain proteins are used more effectively by the body when they're teamed with others. Like cereal with milk, or bread as a sandwich with meat, fish or cheese filling.

Vegetables and fruits may be enjoyed with snacks and desserts as well as at meals. Milk is more than a drink. You may use it in puddings, spread it as cheese or freeze it as in ice cream. Choose milk fresh, canned or dry skim.

How are you feeding your family? Mealtime habits begin at home. Give them food that will provide the right choices. Meal planning becomes a joy, not a chore, when you know food well enough to plan meals that are special, nourishing and delightful to eat.

Good meals have never been easier to prepare. Much of the advance work is done for you. Chickens are cleaned, ready to cook, rice pre-cooked, vegetables and fruits handy year round. With all this, good meals just don't happen. You provide the know how in buying foods and skill in the preparation. The "Daily Food Guide" leaflet will help you include the foods needed everyday. Here are four easy steps that can simplify the plan for meals.

- 1. Choose the main dish first. Make this a good protein source. Then fill in with other foods to supplement the main dish.
- 2. Be sure the meal you plan looks good and shows contrasts of color and flavor.
- 3. Does the meal seem right for the season. Hot and hearty during winter. 4. Remember the needs and appetites for those for whom you are preparing the meal. Do introduce new foods and dishes from time to time. Let the dessert round out the meal and help balance it nutritionally also. There is joy in doing anything well. Choose foods to make a jewel of a meal, with the mark of your own good taste, from the plenty we are lucky enough to have.

In Our Town... The opportunity of making a living may be limited, but it seems a place to live is going to be unlimited.

WASHINGTON AND SMALL BUSINESS

Inaugural addresses, by their very nature, are somewhat obtuse, but it is significant that in his address on inauguration day President Nixon apparently took a positive position on any future plans for this nation to impose its ideas on others.

Obviously, not only in a military sense, but through the years of foreign give aways, this nation has tried to bribe other nations into patterning their institutions after those of the United States. For a long time, voting through the National Federation of Independent Business, the nation's independent business people have supported a cut off of all so-called foreign aid.

There are very few living today who were alive at the time of the Spanish-American War, but the American position toward the Philippines after freeing them from a tyrannic rule in 1898 is one of the brightest stars in the national history.

Not only did we free these people, but the nation promised as soon as ready, they would be given independence.

They believed the American promise, which was best evidenced in World War II. At a time when the peoples of the Dutch, French, British possessions in the Pacific not only accepted, but in many cases supported the enemy, the Philippine people fought side by side with the Americans and even after they were occupied, they continued with their resistance.

WASHINGTON REPORT FROM SENATOR J. GLENN BEALL JR.

Food Labeling And Nutrition

Many Americans are expected to change their eating habits for one day, or as much as a week, in early April to show their concern over rising food prices.

A most boycott in the most publicized aspect of these activities. There are alternatives to meat in our diets, of course, such as eggs, cheese and fish, and learning the nutritional value of different foods can indeed be helpful in cutting the grocery bill and at the same time providing balanced meals.

Unfortunately, it has not always been easy to find out the nutritional value of many foods, or even the ingredients of some of the products that line the supermarket shelves. But something is happening to change all of this, and many shoppers may have already noticed the nutrition labels appearing on some of the foods they are buying.

The new labeling policy is being implemented by the Food and Drug Administration, and it will go a long way in helping the American consumer to be informed about the food we are eating.

The first phase of the policy, which was begun in January, will require processors to put nutrition labels on all foods for which nutritional claims are made, or to which nutrients are added.

The policy will become mandatory for all processed food products by the end of 1975, but the FDA is encouraging voluntary use of the standards before then, and some food processors have already done this.

There will be several things to look for on the nutrition labels. Information will fall into four basic categories: the size of an average serving, the number of calories per serving, the amounts of various nutrients per serving, and its content of saturated and unsaturated fats.

The nutrients — which include protein, vitamins and minerals — will be listed as percentages of the government's recommended daily

A Tropic Lesson

The Filipino support of the American cause was a tribute to the more than 40 years this nation had been engaged in teaching them the democratic processes, and American honor never stood at a higher level when right after the war, without shilly-shally the nation made good on its promise of Philippine independence.

The U.S. institutions were good, the education given in democratic processes was good, and the nation made good its promise. Yet in 25 years the Philippines have become a dictatorship.

While there will probably be many who will heap criticism on the new dictator, and some may even urge American intervention, it would appear it was either this step, or complete chaos and anarchy.

It is past time when many American political leaders, especially the liberal establishment, realizes the American form of democracy is not the best system for all people.

There are many forms of government and these forms are of necessity predicated to some degree on past history, attitudes, educational levels, and many other factors. It has been a ghastly, costly mistake to assume that because the American system works well in America, it should be forced onto everybody else. It is to be hoped that this is what was meant in the inaugural address.

WASHINGTON REPORT FROM SENATOR J. GLENN BEALL JR.

Food Labeling And Nutrition

allowance of the different items. Many breakfast cereals already have labels of the type that will be required, so taking a look at some of the cereal box labels might give shoppers an idea of what kind of information will soon be appearing on many other food products.

The next phase of the FDA policy on food labeling will focus on the product label itself, and how good a job it does in describing the contents of a particular package. For instance, there have been complaints about a pre-packaged chicken dinner with no chicken and a prepackaged steak dinner with no steak.

The manufacturers of these dinners said that the meats were supposed to be added at home, but the FDA ordered them taken off the market because of their misleading labels.

The new policy is intended to require an accurate description of the contents of a food package and clear information on what items should be added to prepared dinners to make them into a complete meal.

Thus, a prepared seafood cocktail, for example, will have to include the percentage, by weight, of each seafood ingredient, and ingredients in all packages will have to be listed in order of their predominance by weight. This will enable a shopper to find out if different prices for the same kind of food product means that there are different proportions of ingredients.

Consumer interest in nutrition has undoubtedly been accentuated by the present-day concern over rising food prices, but the new policy on food labeling may serve an even greater purpose. A Senate committee recently concluded hearings on nutrition in the United States, and the American public was found to have little awareness of food values. A nutrition label will be a simple and effective way of providing this important information.

Letter To The Editor

Letter To The Editor:

A few weeks ago, you carried a letter to the editor from a Mrs. Jones who questioned why Sen. Mary L. Noek's age was missing from the Maryland Manual. I have done some checking of my own on this too, and can now understand why the senator had that information omitted. I have learned that she will soon be 70 years old and that of all her fellow senators whose ages are listed only four out of forty-four are NOT, she is the oldest one presently serving in Annapolis. It is R.M.S. Noek trying to hide this fact from her constituents. Also, I have learned that there are only three members of the entire House of Delegates out of 144, who are older than the lady senator from Salisbury. They are Delegates Murray Ahmanson, Lloyd Randolph, and Eugene Zander. I, for one, believe that a law should soon be enacted that would forbid Sen. Noek and all other elected public officials from seeking reelection after they have reached their 70th birthday. After all, all other county and state employees, including our Circuit and District Court judges, are required to retire at that age, so why should there be any distinction made between them. In fact, I recently talked with one of our judges about this matter and he informs me that he strongly favors such a law. As far as Sen. Noek is concerned, I should think that after having had the privilege of serving in Annapolis for the past 26 years (since 1947), she should be willing to step aside voluntarily before the inevitable occurs.

Cordially yours,
Mrs. Hazel Leigh Phillips

FINE TUNING by Richard W. Smith

One of the great disappointments of the last two broadcast years was the experiment which returned one-half hour of prime time each evening to the local stations for local programming. Usually this was the period between 7:30 and 8:00 P. M. each evening or between 10:30 and 11:00 P. M.

The idea was that local stations would utilize this time for basically local programming. Instead, the time periods filled up with reruns of old programs like "I Dream of Jeannie" or new versions of old game shows like "What's My Line?" These programs often drew big audiences but did not necessarily serve the needs of the community. Now the federal government is seriously considering returning this prime time to the networks for scheduling.

One of the most successful public television programs of the season was something with the unlikely title "VD Blues", dealing mainly with the alarming prevalence of venereal disease among young people. The program accomplished the near impossible of being informative without being preachy. Parents, teachers, and young people praised the show almost uniformly. Now PBS brings "VD Blues" back for a rerun on Monday, April 9th. Dick Cavett is the host of the national show which will appear on Channels 67, 73 and 28.

Following "VD Blues", these same channels will carry a live studio program with visiting experts in public health and psychology or answer telephone inquiries from viewers. Callers will be given specific answers to specific problems or directed to Maryland agencies capable of providing the help needed.

A few weeks ago Channel 45 ran an excellent version of "Whisper" with John Gulligud as "Caesar" with ohn Gulligud as Caesar, Charleston Heaton as Mark Antony and Jason Roberts, Jr. as Brutus. This British-made film was just four years old, apparently having made the trip from theatre to TV without creating any critical excitement along the way. Now channels 67, 73 and 28 will bring another British-made Shakespeare play to the home screen Thursday at 8:00 P. M. This 1969 film is "Hamlet" and stars Nicole Williamson and Mary Anne Faithful.

Over a period of time, television — commercial and public — provides an almost incredible wealth of home entertainment. It simply requires careful following of the schedules and patience. Not all TV evenings are great but there are a lot of good ones in the course of a year.

On the cable TV front, Spain has gone into the business with two 10,000 subscriber systems in Madrid and Barcelona. The Spanish systems are run by the government owned telephone company, Time, Inc. and the Hilton Hotel chain have signed a deal to put the Time cable operation in 40,000 hotel rooms. Goldmark Associates have come up with a handy, set-top device that unscrambles coded signals from a cable when fed the proper amount of money, a special charge card or a monthly subscriber IBM type punched card.

The Queen Anne County Garden Club presented the tree, a Styax Japonica, which will bloom in summer with a delicate bell-shaped white flowers. Sentenced In Check Scheme

A Eastern Shore wholesale produce merchant and his son-in-law, convicted last January of operating a fraudulent scheme that resulted in a loss of about $750,000 by two Eastern Shore banks, were sentenced Friday to federal prison terms.

Sentenced to four years in prison was Martin Hyman, 55, of Elberta Ave. in Salisbury. He is the former president of Cooper Farms, Inc. and M & H Produce Co.

Hyman's son-in-law, Samuel Gershenfeld, 40, of Orchard Circle, was sentenced to two years in prison. He had served as secretary-treasurer of the firms.

Sentences were imposed after a Federal Court jury handed down the convictions by Judge Alexander Harvey 2nd.

The two merchants, according to charges, had engaged in a check kiting scheme that manipulated bank deposits in the Bank of Somerset, in Princess Anne, and the Metompin Bank Trust Company, of Parkley, Virginia.

According to evidence submitted by assistant State's Attorney Jeffrey S. White, checks were written in one bank where there were insufficient funds, and then deposited in the second bank, where new checks were written to cover overdrafts in the first.

The scheme operated from December 1970 until the checks stopped in March 1971.

It was estimated by Judge Harvey that almost $20 million in fraudulent funds passed between the banks before discovered.

He said that she had been pushed to the pavement from behind and beaten by one or more assailants whom she did not see. The incident occurred as she was walking down a dark, narrow street next to the governor's mansion.

"People, who are interested in any regulations which would limit or restrict future operation of beachbuggies on the shores of Assateague Island, should read and comment on this proposal before May 15, 1973," the Superintendent said.

Soon you'll be sewing again or beginning for the first time.

FAMILY LIVING NOTES

How can you tell when adults are really excited? They don't make a lot of noise or jump up and down. Oh, but their faces light up and show such a gleam of excitement. This is how we knew last Friday that seven adults were pleased and excited about their achievement. You see they had completed their first garment. How much did it take? Just a few easy lessons. Not always so easy but through their perseverance, the willingness to come for every session and sheer enjoyment correcting few errors.

At first we thought it would only take three work meetings, but in order to make the complete finish, five were needed. Mrs. Joy Hess chairman of Holly Grove Mennonite Homemakers provided for one extra day at their Church Fellowship Hall. It was another new experience to meet at the Cooperative Extension Service Office for the final run to the Finish Line.

The purpose of the clothing series was:
1. To develop a favorable attitude toward sewing.
2. Determine the correct pattern size based upon body measurements and alter pattern for fit.
3. Use good judgement in selecting of fabrics for basic construction garment.
4. Develop skill in accuracy and competence in sewing operations, (starting and stopping

Something to Think About...
By James L. Hinman

Lincoln Steffens, journalist-reformer (1866-1936) summed up his observations of a half-century with the terse observation that, "Politics is for profit." George McGovern, an example of what Mr. Steffens was talking about. We do in spite of his overwhelming rejection by the voters, may be not mean to imply or suggest even a shade of dishonesty in anything Senator McGovern has done; we use him only as an example of how some politicians do profit legitimately.

Prior to coming to Washington on the federal payroll, George McGovern had never earned more than $6000 in any year of his life. But during the months he scrambled for the White House, he was paid $42,500 in federal salary while away from the Senate most of the time. In addition to his Senate salary, he received $450,000 in numerous perquisites and fringe benefits. George McGovern now owns a $160,000 home in a fashionable Washington residential area, a $75,000 estate on Maryland's Eastern Shore, a "blind trust" that netted him $4,200 last year, and sundry other assets. As a loser politician, he has not done badly. In his bid for the Presidential nomination, it is said that he raised and spent $30 million.

As Mr. Steffens has said, politics can be for profit, but this does not mean that it is always the case. We know some sincere politicians who have left office poorer than when elected to office. But it is not likely to work out that way for George McGovern.

It is quite apparent from the volume of correspondence that we are now receiving that the column is performing a genuine public service. Many of our members have also commented on the fact that they are being questioned about some of the answers which appear in this column.

We just wanted to let you know how effective that we think this column has been in

High School PTA To Meet

The April meeting of the Washington Senior High School Parent Teacher Student Association will be held in the school's auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday night, April 17th.

The format for this meeting will be changed slightly from the customary procedure to allow the faculty and administration through the Parent Teacher Student Association opportunity to explain to parents important data concerning their children's course selection for the 1972-73 school term.

The plan is to have each subject area department offer an explanation as to the graduation requirements in each subject area, to offer an explanation as to what each course within a subject area consists of, to offer an explanation as to what grade levels various courses within a department are open to, and to outline a recommended course of study for that particular department.

With the pre-registration process underway at Washington High for the 1973-74 school term, this program will offer an excellent opportunity for parents to find out more information about subjects offered at the school and hopefully will give parents an opportunity to more knowledgeably advise their children in the selection of courses for the next school term.

All parents are cordially invited to attend this meeting with a special invitation extended to parents of ninth graders at Deal Island and Somerset Schools who will be attending Washington High next term.

Sgts. Fleetwood, Johnson, and Gladden announce that 2 women and 17 men enlisted into the Army during March. They are as follows Gary E. Witcher, Ocean City, assignment fiancée Germany, Jillard A. Handy, assignment to supply, Charles W. Sullivan medical lab field and Norman R. Bridell assignment to Regular Army.

Enlisting into the Delayed Entry Program are John D. Allen, Jacalyn L. Callaway, Daniel H. Campbell, Eugene J. Johnson, Arthur L. Kilfoil, Bernard M. Robert, John W. Dennis, and Brandon B. Domorro.

Grandchildren May Participate In SS Benefits

Some children can now get social security payments on a grandparent's earnings record, according to James G. Woodson, Social Security District Manager in Salisbury.

Because of a recent change in the social security law, some grandchildren who are supported by their grandparent can get monthly social security payments if the grandparent is getting payments or died after working long enough under social security.

The child's parents must be deceased or disabled at the time the grandparent began getting payments or died," Mr. Woodson said. "The child must be under 18 and dependent on the grandparent."

In some cases, grandchildren can get social security payments if they are legally adopted by their grandparent.

C And P Utility To Expand

To provide for the growing communications needs here, the C&P Telephone Company is investing well over $10 million in telephone facilities in Salisbury and nearby communities.

"This represents dozens of projects we've just completed and many more which are now getting underway," said W. R. Logan, manager for the C&P.

"Some of these projects you see in progress—like the outside cable jobs," Mr. Logan observed. "Then, there are major ones which many people aren't aware of—such as the addition we're making to the equipment in the Salisbury central office."

Having just completed telephone facility projects totaling over $900,000 in the Salisbury community alone last year, the C&P is spending $1,825,000 on more equipment in the Salisbury exchange this year.

And the Company plans to begin long-term programs in Salisbury this year which will require investment of almost another $2 million.

"Many other large C&P construction jobs are going on or have just been completed in this general area," Mr. Logan pointed out.

In Ocean City, preparations for the new North Ocean City office to be in service in 1974, plus additions to the present office and other equipment all come to an investment of more than $2,900,000.

The Delmar-to-Salisbury project and additions to the Delmar central office required an outlay of $200,000 last year, and another $100,000 central office addition in Delmar is to begin this year.

Cable additions and other projects in the Princess Anne area just completed or to be finished this year amount to $125,000. And a major central office addition to begin this year will require about $635,000 more to be invested in facilities for Princess Anne customers.

In the Willards area, equipment and cable additions to be in service this year will run about $125,000. A $33,000 project was finished in 1972, and another $50,000 central office expansion project will be begun this year.

Large outside plant jobs and central office equipment additions in the Berlin area are also part of the picture. On the heels of a $320,000 expansion program last year, almost $1 million will be invested in projects to be completed this year, and more additions representing another $300,000 will be started in Berlin.

"The key to all these installations of new and modern telephone equipment is growth," Mr. Logan explained.

"And growth means not only more people wanting phones. It also means that today, people are generally making more calls and talking longer.

"So to stay on top of the situation, we have to add more and more facilities to handle the calls."

crafts; they are presently concluding a sewing unit.

Both boys and girls seem to have enjoyed the experiment and have made some lovely garments for themselves. The boys have concentrated on shirts, ties, vests, and chef's aprons, while the girls have made dresses, slacks, skirts, vests and Seventh and eighth graders at Marion Middle School recently observed National Wildlife Week, March 18-24, 1973.

To commemorate the study of Wildlife, students engaged in a number of activities; some of these included (1) working out wildlife puzzles, (2) doing research on endangered species, (3) making miniature models of wild animals used as mobiles, (4) making quiz picture cards of endangered species, (5) viewing a film on "Mammals", (6) doing research and reports on "Extent and Endangered animals", (7) bringing in live animals for observation, and (8) viewing Wild Kingdom and Audubon Wildlife Theater on T.V. networks.

On Friday, March 24, Mr. Jack Sterling and Mr. Veron Rickers, agents from the division of Game and Inland Fish Commission of the Maryland Department of Interior were guest speakers at an assembly on Wildlife. They showed a film on "Mammals" and answered questions pertaining to Wildlife. They also talked about Conservation as a Career. In connection pertaining to jobs in this area of work.

Students learned that the history of conservation is dominated by man's confrontation with nature. The majority of the species extinctions during the last three centuries are attributable to man, either directly through deliberate slaughter or indirectly through the inability of many wild animals and plants to adapt themselves to fundamental changes in their living conditions resulting from man's degradation of the environment. It is noted that there are over 100 species of endangered animals. Some of these being, (1) The Bald Eagle, (2) The Alligator, (3) Attwater's Prairie's Chicken (4) The Blue Whale (5) The Key Deer, (6) The Brown Pelican, (7) the common egret and the (8) Polar Bear.

Students also bought an aquarium and stocked it with various kinds of fish. As a project they observe and take care of the fish to learn more about their habits, etc. Teachey, sponsoring the activities is Mrs. Beth Price, science teacher at Marion.

Meat Boycott

Somerset Farm Bureau
Robert Pinto, President

The meat boycott proves that the nation has developed an appetite for cheap food which also demonstrates that the public does not consider the part high priced labor contributes to the cost of meat.

A meat manager makes $6.20 an hour and up, a meat cutter $5.47 per hour and up, but this does not seem to worry the consumers. None of the labor leaders are advocating that meat handlers wages be reduced to help lower the retail price of meat. Some interesting wage figures that illustrate how wages have advanced in the last thirteen years:

Brick Layer, 1960: $3.80; 1973: $8.56 plus $1.02 fringe benefits.

Electrician, 1960: $4.00; 1973: $10 plus 60c fringe benefits.

Plumber, 1960: $4.04; 1973: $2.25 plus 70c fringe benefits.

If you can compare wages and meat prices it will show that an hour's work will buy more meat now than it would thirteen years ago. The boycott proves that the public believes farmers should continue to produce at very little profit, while wages are high and wage earners demand a large increase every time a new wage contract comes up.

In the long run the high meat prices will encourage production and the increased production will bring prices down. This is the usual cycle that will occur if the boycott or some other pressure does not interfere.

Our farmers have always responded to higher prices with increased production and there is no reason to believe they will not again, as the producing capacity of the American farmer is not equalled anywhere in the world.

It seems rather selfish for the American public, who have been enjoying the best food in the world and using the smallest part of their income to pay for it of any country on earth, to raise such an objection to the farmer getting his fair share, even temporarily.

The gentle warmth of the seasons first light southerly wind begins to stir the populace. THE PRICE OF MEAT

Many years ago it became apparent that fewer and fewer farmers were providing the food needs of an ever growing non-farm population. The day may come when there are not enough farmers to produce all the quality foods that the population desires.

This trend toward a growing number of people who know nothing about agriculture, today has caused a failure to appreciate the laws of nature.

People apparently think the supply of meat is automatic and is no further away than the city supermarket. Somehow they think the food-stuff is inexhaustible and that the merchant, or the producer, or the farmer sets the price of beef, pork, chickens, etc.

Therefore, to make the price go down, they will boycott the product and the store, the packer or the farmer will cause the price to fall. This may be a fact. The store probably will have to cut the price to keep his stock from rotting, the packer will probably stop buying at the farm because the stores are not buying, and the farmer will be forced to feed out his stock longer and his costs will go up.

The result of this will probably be that the farmer will not start as many feeder calves for next season, as he lost money on his previous herd. Maybe some farmers will be forced to quit and the number of farmers producing the nation's food will again decrease.

No matter what the pressure, the price of beef is set by supply and demand. If the demand falls so will the price, but also so will the meat being produced. A farmer, like everyone else must make a profit or he cannot feed the animals.

There is no short cut, it takes two years to produce the steak, roast or hamburger that you have for dinner . . . also it takes bales and bales of hay, 2,500 pounds of grain, 450 pounds of protein supplement and plenty of green pasture as well as lots and lots of straw.

The nation is consuming more beef products per person than ever before in our history and they are paying but a slight 16% of their income for food. This is probably smaller than by the people in any other country. If the farmer can make a profit he will increase production and in time the supply will meet the demand and prices will go down.

Inflation seems to be a way of life now, and we must recognize that the farmer is a part of our nation . . . his costs will surely rise as wages increase and he must be paid fairly for his efforts.

As sure as nature, the present boycott can only result in a decrease in production and . . . in the long run . . . even higher prices.

Dear Dick:

Sen. Mathias, who hardly knows the meanings of the words, has given us a lecture on loyalty and integrity.

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

It has always been the constitutional responsibility of the Congress of the United States to determine the direction and the amount of federal spending. Now this fundamental relationship as President Nixon has moved to not only set limits on spending but also control, through the release or impoundment of appropriated funds, the direction of that spending. The question is whether the President's action violates the constitutional principle of separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches. President Nixon has expressed his concern for maintaining constitutional balances, but he has said, with reference to the Congress and the Presidency, ". . . we should never overlook the fact that we have joint responsibilities as well as separate powers. There are many areas in which the President and the Congress should and must work together in behalf of all the people—and the level of spending, since it directly affects the pocketbooks of every family in the land, is one of the most critical." There seems little question but that if the Congress is to function as keeper of the nation's purse strings, some drastic changes must be made in the procedures which it follows in considering new spending proposals and appropriating funds to carry on existing programs.

As things now stand, the President submits to the Congress a detailed budget or overall spending plan encompassing all areas of federal activity. But, when the budget reaches Congress, orderly procedures break down. No single committee or group ever looks at the federal budget in its entirety. Instead, the various spending proposals embodied in it are considered as separate entities by a variety of congressional committees concerned with special areas of activity as, for example, national defense, education, agriculture, etc. In addition, Congress considers many appropriation bills not included in the budget. They are taken up as separate legislative actions, largely uncoordinated with the overall budget picture. In addition to this, established programs are carried on with little scrutiny of their effectiveness and with little control over unpredictable costs of unforeseen expansion. New programs are set up with little regard for the fact that they may overlap other activities already being carried on.

One proposal for reform of this chaos has been embodied in legislation introduced by Senator Brock of Tennessee. In emphasizing the urgency of providing ". . . Congress with a mechanism to establish national priorities and control federal expenditures," Senator Brock points out that in the past 10 years the average family's share of the national budget has gone up by 82 percent from $2,022 to over $3,600. Every year it takes 10 percent of the average family's taxes just to pay the interest on the national debt.

Senator Brock proposes that Congress should do five things: "First. Project all major federal expenditures over a 5-year period; Second. Evaluate all major federal programs at least once every 3 years—zero budgeting; Third. Pilot test every proposed major federal program; Fourth. Designate a joint congressional committee to evaluate the federal budget in terms of priorities; and Fifth. Subject federal programs financed through trust funds to the annual appropriation process just as other tax-supported programs."

The Senator points out that three must be a turnabout in thinking—the value of social welfare programs should be determined by their success in solving problems rather than by the number of people to whom they channel funds. Programs should be "solution-oriented" and terminated or carried on according to their degree of success. He lists a number of consequences that flow from uncontrolled government expenditures, including such things as an increasing drain of total assets of the country away from private citizens, businesses and industry, continued inflation of the economy, higher taxes and ultimately the failure of government's ability to provide essential services.

The present battle of the budget being waged between the President and the Congress should draw public attention to the immediate urgency of establishing coordinated planning and control of federal spending. The nation cannot much longer afford a congressional appropriation process that resembles a team of undisciplined midgets romping through a candy store. If Congress does fail to live up to its fiscal responsibilities, national bankruptcy or strong man rule would seem to be the ultimate alternatives. This would indeed be a tragic end to the story of freedom under representative government in the U. S.

In Our Town . . .

The State of Things

By Val Hymes

It Was Depressing

When the session finally ground to a hopeless halt at midnight Monday, they were still calling it "the dullist yet."

It wasn't really dull. It was depressing. It was a session marked by failure, smeared by scandal, and without excitement, inspiration, or optimism.

The special interest "snakes" slithered out from under their rocks, and most of the conflict of interest bills were laughed into obscurity again. In the Spirit of '73 — "Don't get mad, get even" — a package of serious anti-blockbusting bills were killed in revenge for the reapportionment filibuster. To be sure, there were a few efforts made for constructive legislation, like the rent control bill.

It was as if the members were trying to recoup something out of the session, but it was too little too late. "An anticlimax," said one reporter. "I thought it was building to something in the last three days, but there are even fewer stories now." And when the chief executive was looked to for guidance, he waffled.

Whether it was land use, assessments, the liquor markup bill, small loan rates, the bill to abolish the sports complex authority or University of Maryland autonomy, the death penalty or abortion or the meat boycott, he wouldn't take a stand.

Granted, Governor Mandel endorsed the "concept" or the "philosophy" of many of these issues, and put his strength and that of his aides behind some of them, but that's not what it looks like back home.

The dank smell surrounding the entire session became overpowering, however, when the federal agents staked out the rotunda of the State House, prepared to close in on a Baltimore delegate.

Not only did the arrest — for transporting some $10 million worth of drugs — cast an immediate shadow on the full General Assembly, but the Governor's responsibility in not blocking the legislator's appointment was treated as suspect.

DEFENSIVE, EVASIVE

Joe Taxpayer saw Mandel accuse reporters of being "unfair." They had asked him why he did not appoint the delegate to the local liquor board, and later honored his appointment to the House by the Central Committee. In this interchange Joe Taxpayer saw his governor acting defensively and evasively. Even worse were the hints that national politics were involved in this case. Governor Mandel said he had been assured by U.S. Attorney George Beall, brother of GOP Sen. J. Glenn Beall, that the arrest would take place in Baltimore. But there were those federal agents, leaning against the marble walls, casing the doors to the House chamber and watching the exits.

Then a photographer appeared, poised for action.

Inside the House chamber, most delegates were unaware of what was happening. The man who was to be arrested — and apparently knew it — sat stiffly at his desk, clenching his hands together. A page went to his desk and whispered something. He rose and slipped out the back door, down a side staircase and out a basement door.

ORDERED INTO CAR

Two of the marshals had left moments before, and as reporters followed, the delegate walked down the street toward his hotel. A car suddenly appeared, going the wrong way on a one-way street. It screeched to a halt, the door flew open, and he was ordered inside. The car headed to Baltimore, where Del. James A. "Turk" Scott Sr. was charged with transporting heroin from New York to Baltimore.

When asked about his foreknowledge of the delegate's background, Mandel became angry, as he often does, and attacked, as he often does, throwing his questioners off the track.

"I don't understand from the point of reporting why you all haven't asked the State Central Committee why they made the appointment. But I am not a reporter either, so I can't answer that." This remark in no way answered the reporters' questions of how a man unqualified for the liquor board could have been endorsed without question for the House of Delegates.

As usual, the governor is absolutely correct in saying he had no official say in the legislative appointment, except to pass it on from the central committee to the speaker for swearing in. But something more is expected from a chief executive in a time of crisis.

"MORAL LEADERSHIP"

"Call it corny," said one legislator, "but we could use some moral leadership around here." And he pointed at the liquor markup bill, the small loan industry bonanza, a tax write-off, for bus company owners, and repeated charges on the floors of both houses of winning and dining for votes.

Yet, say his admirers, "He serves the public mood. His sense of a political trend in its infancy can't be denied."

That doesn't say much for the public mood, which is pretty dark right now.

"He only reacts, he seldom acts," said one senator, "and when he does, it's aimed at Washington" where Mandel lobbies for the states as national governors chairman.

So while Maryland's governor appeared to be engaged in a political war dance with the national Republican Party, the 1973 session hobbled to a depressing finish.

A lot of work was accomplished; a lot of creative and solid bills were enacted, and will be examined more closely.

But the whole session had been permeated by the improbable combination of odors from back-room Baltimore politics and Washington's parlor-room intrigues over the 1976 elections. The cat-fights between Speaker Thomas Hunter Lowe, a lobbyist and a Baltimore newspaper only made it worse. The State House tended to take on the atmosphere of a back alley.

NEWSMAN "BITES HIS DOG"

From time to time in this column and in my radio program and our monthly newsletter, I have reluctantly reported on criticism of some of the major news media by prominent journalists. I reported the criticism for two reasons: (1) self-criticism in any profession or institution is usually healthy and it has the "man bites dog" element so dear to journalists; and (2) the objective handling of news and information beamed to our 200 million citizens is a sacred responsibility in which the public has a great stake.

I have just read the newest book on the subject of media news handling, and because it was written by a man who, in his 50 years of practicing journalism, was a reporter, managing editor and the publisher of chains of newspapers in the east and the midwest. I want to review it here. He is John E. Tilton. His book is entitled: "Blind Behemoth — a critical study of news media performance." It is available ($3.50) from Sun Press, 6601 W. 78th St., Edina, Minnesota.

Reluctant Witness

Journalism is John Tilton's first, foremost and continuing love. "The army of news gatherers, editors, publishers and broadcasters, providing a dedicated performance in the face of mounting obstacles, are not the target of this monograph," he says. "They merit the gratitude of the American people. Their failure is not of intent but of forces over which no one has exercised control." Then he goes on in his 105 page book to perform the sharpest analysis of biased news dissemination that we have so far read. He says that, in effect the policy of some influential media is threatening America's future.

"And it should be emphasized that the core of the trouble is in the great news generating centers of the nation, not the thousands of smaller newspapers, radio and television stations primarily concerned with local affairs.

"Survey the news flow of the last two decades and you'll discover virtually every facet of the American system has come under embittered and continuing attack," he says. "The police, perhaps the most vital, dedicated and undercompensated of all public servants, assailed for 'brutality.' The Pentagon, symbol for the nation's armed services, portrayed as a greedy conspiracy of the brass' and some favored military contractors, wasting the country's treasure.

Not Pretty Picture

"The churches, called centers of hypocrisy. Business, big and small, portrayed as conscienceless operations preying on a helpless people. Health care professionals (physicians) pilloried because their costs climbed after Union organization of their people ended decades of scandalously low wages there . . . The President, the Congress, the Courts constantly criticized and condemned.

"The picture which emerges is an unpretty portrayal of a crass and materialistic people, chained to a passion for status, plodding through a miserable lifetime . . . slaves manipulated by the twin ogres of Wall Street and the Pentagon. A people ruthless while industry ruthlessly destroys its ecological birthright, a greedy military-industrial complex squanders its wealth and its manufactures threaten its health with poisonous chemicals and dangerous motor cars. A people ruthlessly exploiting its minorities, indifferent to the poor and suffering in its midst. A political system controlled by a few rich and influential contributors which offers the common man no real choice . . .

Truth Required

"The truth, of course, is painted in far brighter colors. If the 'real America' could stand up, its portrait would show a busy, happy people who have managed to blend the world's highest living standards with a faith in spiritual values that keeps its churches filled, its schools functioning and its business, politics and industry on an incredibly high plane.

"What is the mission of the media in a Republic? To tell the people the truth . . . The media in the United States have singularly failed to meet this responsibility." He gives details on the handling, by some major news agencies, of major news stories of recent years, to bear out his charge; that biased reporting helped prolong the Vietnam war, assisted the spread of revolutionary actions in the streets, contributed to the breakdown of law and order, and today is endangering the nation. "The credibility gap is real . . . but it is the product of media weakness even more than official deceit and such weakness traces to a fundamental, historical misunderstanding and misdefinition of media goals and responsibilities."

The April 12 Freedom Forum, to be held in Searcy, Arkansas, has the theme: "Responsibilities of the News Media in a Free Society." Vice President Agnew is one of the speakers. You are invited to attend.

The Executive Privilege Corps

By RALPH NOVAK

NEW YORK (CEF)

There is so much secrecy surrounding the activities of President Nixon's White House staff that it was especially interesting to learn from an Oval Room source how the staff members are hired.

The source — who invoked executive privilege to avoid being identified — said all job applicants are hooked up to a lie detector and required to answer the following question, "Are you now or have you ever been a Democrat?"

Those who pass are given a haircut by President Nixon's staff barber — who used to work on recruits at Fort Leonard Wood — and then given the following multiple choice test:

- 1. White House assistants (WHA) should be (a) seen and not heard; (b) heard and not seen; (c) not seen and not heard; (d) what White House assistants?
- 2. When a reporter calls, a good WHA (a) disguises his voice and pretends he is the military attaché of the Bolivian embassy; (b) tells his secretary to say he will be out to lunch until next Thursday; (c) tells the reporter he will be glad to answer any questions as long as they have to do with either kite-flying or the problems of housebreaking gila monsters; (d) asks if the reporter can call Feb. 1, 1977.
- 3. Which of the following hobbies is unacceptable for a WHA: (a) singing "Deutschland über Alles"; (b) calling pro football coaches with suggestions; (c) attending Shirley MacLaine movies; (d) sitting in the lobby of the Watergate apartments.
- 4. The proper facial expression for a WHA is (a) stern and condescending; (b) stern and impatient; (c) stern and disgusted; (d) stern and getting sterner.
- 5. Under the checks and balances system in our government, the role of Congress is to (a) tote that barge and lift that bale; (b) suggest and request; (c) stay out of the way; (d) show a little respect.
- 6. A WHA is responsible only to (a) the memory of William Pittmore; (b) Julie and Tricia; (c) his mother-in-law; (d) higher moral principles, details of which are available daily in the President's office.
- 7. A WHA must address the President as (a) "Richie"; (b) "Ike"; (c) "Your Presidentship"; (d) "Coach."
- 8. Which of the following is not among the fringe benefits a WHA can expect to receive upon his retirement: (a) a $175,000-a-year job as an adviser in private industry; (b) a contract to write a book about his assisting career; (c) three gross of autographed pictures of himself shaking hands with the President; (d) the thanks of a grateful nation.

A Time to Make Amends

Now that the Vietnam situation is patched up, it is perhaps time to reflect on these most distracting years. Probably no occurrence in this century has caused so much divisiveness among Americans.

A great deal of that divisiveness was created by the so-called "liberal establishment." It is perhaps high time that this liberal establishment make amends, leaving aside all the pros and cons of whether or not their position was valid.

But the liberal establishment cannot escape the fact that it was largely through their activities that events in Vietnam came about in the first place.

Back in the '50's, the late Senator John Bricker of Ohio had before the Congress an amendment to the United States Constitution which was named the Bricker amendment. It was strongly supported by the independent business people as well as many other citizens according to surveys by the National Federation of Independent Business.

For some reason, over which historians are still arguing, there was a boobytrap written into the Constitution. The best explanation for its existence is probably that it was due to a compromise between those who stood at that time for state rights and those who advocate Federal control.

However, the Bricker Amendment was defeated largely by the efforts of the liberal establishment. Yet defeat of this amendment made Vietnam possible, which the liberal establishment used to divide the nation. Perhaps it is high time that "liberals" re-think their position. There is no law against liberals being consistent.

Peyton Students See Orioles Win

Members of the Safety Patrol at Sarah M. Peyton School for Exceptional Children in Crisfield attended last Saturday's baseball game between the Orioles and Milwaukee Brewers in Baltimore.

The ten students and their supervisors left Crisfield at 9 a.m. and after a restaurant stop for lunch were at the stadium in time to observe warm-up activity by the players and were able to purchase snacks and souvenirs prior to the game.

Saturday's contest was the annual game for Safety Patrol members from each school in the state. It was the fifth year that students from Peyton were able to take the trip. As has been in the past, they all seemed to enjoy it and were elated that they saw the Orioles win the exciting game in extra innings.

Funds provided for the trip were through contributions to the school's Children's Fund. And both students and staff always thank those who are so generous with their contributions. Mr. Gorman (Blondie) Moore (one of the school's parents) supervised the trip and was ably assisted by Clarence Spiker, Barry Wheaton, "Jit" Whittington and Russell Coleman. A tip of the hat is due these gentlemen.

Maryland's wild turkeys, big and bearded, are described in a publication available from the Department of Natural Resources.

The folder, published by DNR's Extension Services, tells the story of how the species, once on the verge of extinction in Maryland, made a comeback with the aid of management efforts by DNR's Wildlife Administration.

So successful has been the turkey repopulation program in Maryland that there now are two hunting seasons open to sportsmen in the state, fall and spring. The spring season is set for April 30 through May 5 in seven counties — Garrett, Allegany, Washington, Frederick, Montgomery, Harford and Dorchester.

Hunters need a valid Maryland license and a turkey stamp. If he was fortunate enough to bag a turkey during the fall season, he does not need a new turkey tag. He can design one himself and place it on the bird he bags in the spring. Hunters can hunt the bearded birds only between one-half hour before sunrise to 10 a.m. local times. Male birds only during the spring season.

The Extension Service folder contains a map showing turkey range and hunting areas that are open during the spring season.

The brochure is available free by writing Extension Services, Department of Natural Resources, Taxes State Office Building, B-4, Annapolis, Md. 21401. Copies also are available at the DNR Regional Service Centers: 103 N. Main St., Bel Air; 910 Cooper St., Salisbury; 29 "C" St., Laurel; and National Pike, LaVale, west of Cumberland.

"What You Don't Know Can Kill You" is the name of a special television program dealing with the ways in which all of us receive information about medical problems. The program is tied to the national release of the report of the President's Committee on Health Education. It will be hosted by commentator Martin Agronsky.

Segments of the program will point out how patients with sickle cell anemia can be cured if properly treated; how 70,000 American Indians in Los Angeles and 58,000 Orientals in San Francisco suffer from a multitude of medical problems because they do not speak English and fail to get information about their medical problems; how one of every five high schoolers in Los Angeles will contract venereal disease because they get misinformation in the street and no information in the classroom.

The 90-minute program will include a panel discussion by the science writers of "The San Francisco Chronicle," "The New York Times" and "The Washington Post." Channels 67, 73 and 28 will carry the program on Monday, April 16th at 8:30 P.M.

Administration staffers seem to be fighting to claim credit for cutting the funding to public television. "Television Digest" reports that Nixon speechwriter Pat Buchanan, while a guest on the "Dick Cavett Show," claimed credit for writing the veto message. Then officials of Clay Whitehead's White House Office of Telecommunications claimed credit for having drafted the same message.

Regardless of who drafted the message vetoing the funds, the result is that public television will limp through the 1973-74 season with a minimum of new programming at the national level.

On the local level, however, public television remains unaffected and will continue to supply such programs of local interest as he edited taped replay of the Johns Hopkins-University of Virginia lacrosse game. This could well be the game that determines the pre-play-off national championship. The game will be played at Homewood in Baltimore on Saturday the 14th, with the edited highlights available over Channels 67, 73 and 28 on Sunday the 15th at 10:00 P.M.

One of the great broadcasting "no-nos" is about to fall. Pressed by the official New York State Off Track Betting operation and by other states with official lotteries, the FCC has decided to allow broadcast advertising of state-operated gambling.

A new series of Perry Mason adventures is in the works for next season on CBS. Missing will be Raymond Burr who made such a success out of the old black and white series that Channels 11 & 5 still show them. The new Perry, Della and Paul have not been named by the network. Also coming from the same people are two half-hour situation comedies and two detective adventure series.

To make room for the newcomers, CBS will cancel two situation comedies, one adventure/detective show and a variety hour. Big names Bill Cosby and Doris Day are to be lost in the changeover.

Testimony before the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs heard experts state that General Mills provides booklets to parents cautioning against the heavy intake of sweets for children yet spends millions inducing children to eat heavily sugared cereals through television ads.

Harvard Professor Jean Mayer maintained that the food ads on television are a "national disaster" because they equate goodness with sweetness in the child viewer's mind. An entire string of experts testified that ads stressing consumption of sugary products should be curtailed for the good of the nation's health.

Somerset County's new Agricultural and Civic Center is nearing completion and work has started on the parking facilities, according to Robert Pinto, chairman.

The Extension offices are also near completion, and Mr. Pinto said, he believes that the Extension Service staff is planning to move in some of their equipment next week.

The building chairman said that there was some rush as the Civic Center enters its final stage as Miss Judy Hall, who is scheduling bookings for the auditorium, has reported that the Business and Professional Women's Club is planning to hold a card party at the Center about April 25. He said that he heard that a church program was expected to book the auditorium for May 5 and the O. T. Beauchamp Post No. 94, American Legion has announced their annual banquet and dance to be held there on Saturday, May 12.

Yet to be installed are the tile floor in the auditorium, the carpet floor and some of the walls in the Extension office annex as well as smoothened sidewalks.

Mr. Pinto reported that $95,818.25 had been spent on the project to date. The contract price on the main building was $117,980.00 but the building committee had added extra expenses, such as the auditorium floor tile, running water and sewer, underground electric lines and additional extra doors. Also not in the contract is an expected installation of 12 inch storm sewer pipes on each side of the building about 150' long to handle the water from the 16,000 feet of roof.

Mr. Pinto also estimated that over $4,500 would be needed to equip the kitchen, buy chairs, tables and other equipment and other items to complete the building.

The total cost of between $10 and $11 a square foot is considered low for a completely equipped building.

Expenditures listed to date include Frank Farlow, Architect, $581.25; Bill Bozman, foundation fill, $1295.00; Blades payment on building, $38,700.; Blades, payment on building, 12,420.; Blades payment on building, 13,122.; Blades payment on building, 10,000.; Blades payment on building, 19,430.; Bozman, foundation fill for Extension offices, 270.

Total, $95,818.25. Mr. Pinto said that there were still those who had not completed their pledges and others who had expected to contribute as the contract neared completion. There may even be some people who will want to be a part of this civic improvement when they see the great use that this structure will be put to meet the social and economic needs of Somerset County. A visit to the site should convince anyone and Mr. Pinto is extending an invitation to anyone who wishes to visit and inspect the building.

The Somerset County Fair Board has already contributed the nine acre $40,000 site and the Board plans to make improvements on the grounds and add to the Fair facilities. However, if necessary they may be called upon to meet from their savings a part of the remaining expenses and cut back on their improvement plans.

Mr. Pinto said that he hoped that he would not have to ask them to do this and was urging the public to act now to meet the remainder of the construction costs and to reduce the amount of money that the Building committee has borrowed to date.

Construction Scheduled For Janes Island

Construction of shower and sanitary facilities will begin this summer on the island portion of Janes Island State Park, according to the Department of Natural Resources.

DNR's Capital Programs Administration announced that the State Department of General Services has asked for bids on the project which also includes offices for park personnel. The bids will be opened May 3, clearing the way for start of construction early this summer. The unit probably will be ready for the 1974 season.

The building will be of exposed aggregate and concrete construction, raised to avoid high water and designed to withstand heavy winds.

Janes Island is in Somerset County near Crisfield and is bordered by waters of the Big and Little Annessex Rivers and Tangier Sound. The park, mainland and island areas, consists of nearly 3,000 acres.

FHA Moves To New Officers

A new office of the Farmers Home Administration for Somerset County is now located in Princess Anne on Prince William Street, across from the Court House. For the past three months they were located in the Chamberlin Building in temporary space where they made Emergency loans for damages to crops and buildings due to Hurricane Agnes and carried out their other loan programs.

Since they are now centrally located in the heart of the county instead of working out of Snow Hill, they hope to reach many more people who wish to purchase or build homes in the county who can not obtain their financing elsewhere. They also have funds available for operating purposes, the purchase of farms, and the purchase of machinery and broiler equipment or farm equipment for those who cannot get credit elsewhere at rates and terms which they can afford.

The County Supervisor for this office is Stephen D. Wiles and the phone number is 651-3765. The office is open Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. If you feel that you might be eligible for their services, please call or stop by their office and they will be happy to be of service.

Something to Think About...
By James L. Hinman

If Senator George McGovern has proved nothing else, he has proved himself to be a highly successful fund-raiser. The mailing list his organization worked up is now regarded as highly valuable property, and the Senator considers it to be his personal property. If he likes you, you can rent his list at the rate of $35 per thousand names, or the complete list for $22,000. One of those renting the list is Ralph Nader; he wants to raise money for his "Public Citizen" activities. Another rentee of the list is the former senator from Oklahoma, Fred Harris. Fred Harris wants to raise money to get his "tax reform" movement off the ground.

But first priority for this list is the raising of funds to assure McGovern's reelection to the Senate next year. He plans to raise a million dollars for that purpose; that figures out to about $3 for every person who voted in his state last year. It will be interesting to see if money can swing it for him; in the '72 Presidential contest, his state of South Dakota went for Nixon 161,028 to 139,277.

All of this, we think, points up a fact of life about politics today. If you have national political ambitions, or if you have an idea that you feel would be good for our country, you will have to first figure out how to raise a lot of money. Right off, you will need $22,000 to rent McGovern's list, and you will then need an additional $10,000 to prepare and mail a letter to each person on the list.

REAL PURPOSE IN LIVING

By Carl Hoffman

In the first chapter of Philippians we have an account of the life and death of the blessed Paul; His life was Christ, and his death was gain. The real purpose in living for every Christian is Christ. The real purpose in dying for every Christian is gain.

To the carnal man, living is for selfish gain and dying is loss. When man's purpose in living stops at the grave, he becomes narrow in his lack of vision. He has no real purpose in living.

But death to the Christian is gain. It delivers him from all the evils of life and brings him to the possession of eternal life in Christ Jesus.

Paul says that he has a desire to depart and be with Christ even while he is living. He recognizes that this is far better. Nevertheless he is willing to stay and work the will of his Father. This is a proper perspective of living. We recognize that it is far better to depart and be with Christ. Nevertheless, we are willing to remain in this life to accomplish the will of our Father until He calls us home.

How do you view death? Do you count it gain or loss? It is counted true in holy scriptures that we really find no purpose in living until we find real purpose in dying.

Center Stage At UMES Here

Multi-talented was Robert E. Sherwood, author of "The Petrified Forest," to be presented by Baltimore's Center Stage at the University of Maryland, Eastern Shore on April 23 and 24 a man who completed two full professional lives during which he captured our coveted Pulitzer Prizes.

His brilliant career as a playwright between the two World Wars spanned Broadway's Golden Era and propelled him into fostering the betterment and expansion of theater, not only in New York but nationally, as well.

As president of the American National Theater and Academy (ANTA), created by Congress in 1935, envisioned the organization of national tours of the great plays to all interested communities in the country. Unfortunately, his idea never bore fruit because World War II began and he entered his second career in government as head of the Office of War Information first, and as an aide to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, second.

The idea of national touring, however, has lingered over the years and is finally a reality due to the National Endowment for the Arts' awarding grants to Baltimore's Center Stage and the Guthrie Theater, located in Minneapolis, for the purpose of touring plays to residents of this country who might not otherwise have the opportunity to see professional theater in their communities.

"We had no knowledge of Sherwood's wish to undertake such mammoth theatrical tours when we decided to tour 'The Petrified Forest.' We are delighted to begin one of the first two regional tours ever with a play authored by a man who conceived the idea," said Peter W. Culman, Center Stage's producing director.

Wins Ribbon In National Daffodil Show

A vase of three stems of Silver Chimes daffodil won a blue ribbon for Mrs. Merton S. Yergler of Princess Anne at the National Show of the American Daffodil Society in Williamsburg April 12-14. Several other ribbons were won by daffodils from the Yergler garden where over two thousand daffodils were entered in competition.

The show was one feature of the National Convention of the American Daffodil Society which is held each year in a different section of the country. Members attended from most states as well as from England, North Ireland, and Holland to enjoy the especially arranged tours to the riverfront estates of Mrs. Theodore Pratt in Bens, Virginia and Mrs. Webster Rhoads in Gloucester, Virginia as well as the well-known Daffodil Mart of Mrs. George Heath in Gloucester.

The theme of the convention was "Daffodils International" with programs and commercial exhibits by hybridizers from Oregon as well as foreign countries. Of special interest was a flower arrangement demonstration using nothing but "collar" or "butterfly" daffodils with some evergreen foliage. The young Dutch woman making the arrangements was Miss Marianne Gerritsen of Voorschoten, Holland who is internationally known for her talent in the artistic use of the split-corona (commonly called collar or butterfly daffodils which her father has hybridized and made world famous.

In 1974 the ADS Convention will be held in Cincinnati, Ohio from April 16 to 18 with the probability that at its show there will be a new award for an exhibit of a large number of daffodils that have been bred in America. This announcement the Yerglers said was of interest to them because 35 per cent of the daffodils in their garden were bred in Oregon, Virginia, or Maryland.

Housing Loan Funds Available Through June

Allotted rural housing loan funds through the Farmers Home Administration remain available through the month of June for the purchase of construction of modest family dwellings, C. William Haines, Jr., State FHA Director for New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware, announced.

Farmers Home Administration housing loans are made in rural areas and small rural communities up to 10,000 population. These loans carry an interest rate of 7 1/4 per cent and are repaid over a period of 33 years.

Mr. Haines pointed out that Farmers Home Administration credit has been a major force in helping rural people in the state to improve their communities with water and sewer systems and helping thousands of low and moderate income families to acquire modern decent housing.

service has virtually tripled in the past four years due to its success in placing notes with private investors.

Applications for Farmers Home Administration rural housing loans may be made through realtors or contractors in the local areas. Interested applicants may contact the local Farmers Home Administration Supervisor, Steve Wiles in Princess Anne, Somerset County, 651-3765.

School Bus Safety Week

Governor Marvin Mandel has proclaimed April 23rd through April 28th School Bus Safety Week in Maryland.

The Governor urges that the observance of this week be focused upon the State's 5,000 school bus drivers.

In presenting the proclamation to the representatives of sponsoring organizations the Governor pointed out that the responsibilities of school bus drivers grow with the increasing number of vehicles on streets and highways.

All drivers can and must contribute to the safety of children of this State, the Governor commented through observing fully all the traffic and safety laws of Maryland.

Activities in the counties honoring bus drivers will be coordinated by the local school supervisors of transportation and will range from programs planned by the children to honor their own school bus drivers to public expressions of appreciation over public media.

Seeks To Dredge River At Clara

The U. S. Army Engineer District, Baltimore has received an application from Palmer Enterprises, c/o Frank Palmer, White Haven, Maryland 21873 for a Department of the Army permit to dredge in Wicomico River near Clara, Wicomico County, Maryland.

Plans showing the proposed work are on file in the Operations Division W. R. Grace Building, 14th Floor, 10 E. Baltimore Street, Baltimore, Maryland 21202 and may be seen by interested parties. The plans indicate that approximately 4,814 cubic yards of dredged material, consisting of silt, sand and clay, to be deposited and retained landward of the mean high water shoreline. The dredging will be accomplished with a dragline.

The decision as to whether a permit will be issued will be based on an evaluation of the impact of the proposed work on the public interest. Factors affecting the public interest include, but are not limited to, navigation, fish and wildlife, water quality, economics, conservation, aesthetics, recreation, water supply, flood damage prevention, ecosystems, and, in general, the needs and welfare of the people. Comments on these factors, will be accepted and made part of the record and will be considered in determining whether it would be in the best public interest to grant a permit. All comments should be furnished in writing to this office on or before May 8, 1973.

It is requested that you communicate the foregoing information concerning the proposed work to any persons known by you to be interested and who, not being known to this office, do not receive a copy of this notice.

Marion School Honor Arbor Day

During the week of April 2-6, 1973, students from the Marion Middle School honored Arbor Day.

State forest rangers, Ashley, Jones, and Whittington from Maryland State Department of Forest and Parks distributed a package of seedlings to each student. The rangers explained the purpose of Arbor Day, how to plant the seedlings and demonstrated how these trees should be planted. Several students were also allowed to plant trees in the school yard.

Arbor Day is a day set apart for planting trees. Most northern states celebrate Arbor Day in April or May. Tree planting is only the first step in the celebration of Arbor Day for many communities. School children and Boy Scout groups often take the responsibility for protecting and tending the trees they plant.

Arbor Day began in Nebraska. J. Sterling Morton, a newspaper publisher, realized that trees would enrich the soil and conserve moisture in it. Thru his efforts, April 10, 1872, was set aside as Nebraska's first Arbor Day. The state government offered prizes to the groups and individual who planted the most trees. On that first day, the people of Nebraska planted more than a million trees.

After Morton died, the Nebraska legislature, changed the date of Arbor Day to his birthday, April 22, and made it a legal holiday.

Other states recognized the value of tree planting and began celebrating Arbor Day. In 1813, the American Forestry Congress passed a resolution promoting it. The National Education Association adopted a similar resolution the next year.

Searching For Outstanding Senior Citizen

Mrs. Phlorena Bradford, Director of the MAC Multi-Service Center in Somerset County, is still conducting the search for Somerset's most outstanding senior citizen. Mrs. Bradford continued to say that response to the contest has been favorable but would like to remind those intending to make an entry of the deadline of April 30.

Nominees must be residents of the county and above the age of 60. A 50 word or less paragraph telling why you feel a certain senior citizen should be the most outstanding must accompany entries. Fill out the entry blank, and return it to: P. O. Box 22, Princess Anne, Md. 21853.

Judges of the contest will be members from the County Commission of Aging and Harold Massey from the Somerset County Commissioners.

Abandoned Vehicle Junk Drive Underway

The Delmarva Advisory Council's project to rid the county of thousands of abandoned vehicles has successfully gotten underway.

Volunteers from the DAC's Conservation Committee have been busy locating the junk autos that will be collected by the 1229th Light Truck Company of the Maryland National Guard during the months of June and July.

Anyone having possession of, or knowledge of, a junked vehicle that should be removed from the county's landscape, should contact one of the following agencies: Somerset County Commissioners, 651-0320 City Hall, Crisfield, 968-1333, or the Office of Public Information, 968-2202. The information you give will then be forwarded to the Kiwanis Club, the Somerset Women's Club and Crisfield and Washington High Schools. Individuals from these organizations will then obtain releases allowing the collection of the junked autos.

It should be remembered that Somerset County has no law concerning junk automobiles and that a car under eight years of age requires its title in order to be junked.

This project necessitates the cooperation of the citizens of Somerset in making this campaign a successful one.

CLEAN UP

Members of the Upper Hill Climbers 4-H Club sponsored an Upper Hill Community Clean-Up Campaign, April 2-7. Under the direction of Miss June Rhodes, Upper Hill Climbers 4-H Club Leader, 4-H'ers, CBC members, and other residents of the community collected trash from yards, ditches, empty lots and church properties in an effort to improve the appearance of the area.

Christian Science

What can Christian Science do for a family? It can bring an understanding of God's closeness and care, helping each one in the family in everything he does.

It can develop a deep love for the Bible, and joyful obedience to God's law.

It can teach every member, and the family together, to heal problems in the way Jesus showed.

How can Christian Science do all this? Through Sunday School classes that strengthen children. Through Sunday services that inspire parents. Through Wednesday testimony meetings where personal accounts are shared. Through Reading Rooms where truths are pondered in quiet.

Want to invite Christian Science into your family's life? Attend First Church of Christ, Scientist, Salisbury at the intersection of Smith Street and South Blvd. at 11:00 a.m. The subject is "Doctrine of Atonement."

ACCREDITED

Dr. Harold M. English, Superintendent of Eastern Shore State Hospital, has been notified by Dr. John D. Porterfield, Director of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, that Eastern Shore State Hospital again has been fully accredited for a two-year period, which is the maximum granted. The reaccreditation is a result of an in-depth survey of the facility conducted on January 3, 4, and 5, 1973, by Dr. James B. Gayne, field representative of the Joint Commission.

Want to take a break from the trials and tribulations of this mechanized, stylized, mesmerized, computerized, dehumanized world? Come join the Drama Class of Washington High School on a nostalgia trip back into the 1940's as they present their spring production, "To Radio, With Love" at 8:00

P.M., Wednesday, April 25, and Thursday, April 26, in the W.H.S. auditorium.

"To Radio, With Love" is an original comedy based on the songs and shows which were favorites of so many Americans during the '40's: "Captain Midnight," "The Lone Ranger," "Amos and Andy," and others.

Through the old-fashioned radio (played by Cher Kroupa) the audience is given a glimpse of what life was like for an average American couple during that time-Howard and Lydia Benson (Ken Reynolds and Vicki Street). Pianist Ellen Klopner and director Gloria Haller combine their talents to produce exciting musical numbers everyone remembers: "How About You", "Heat Wave", "Daddy", "Where or When", and many more. The talented cast also includes a dozen singers, dancers, and actors: Morris Milbourne, Alan Dykes, Nancy Baugher, William Pender, Clarice Jones, Wendy Rivers, Jeanne Wiles, Jackie Fontaine, Michael Wallace, Marshall Parks, Patrice Barkley, and Ken Good, and two mad, mad transistors, Franzella Hayward and Janice Wilson.

Tickets are available from any cast member or at the door. Be sure to see "To Radio With Love." A good time is guaranteed for all.

What's in a Date?

By RALPH NOVAK

NEW YORK (CEP)

"Good afternoon. This is the Flaunt-It Computer Dating Service—chicks with zap on your lap in a snap."

"Yes, hello. This is Dr. H. Kissinger and . . ."

"Not, THE Dr. Kissinger?"

"Yes, yes, but I'd appreciate it if you wouldn't blab it around. You see, I needed a date and I wondered."

"But, YOU? Why would you need a date?"

"Do I have to tell? Can't I claim executive privilege or something?"

"I'm sorry. This is strictly business."

"All right. To tell the truth, I'm just bored with going out with Ali MacGraw, Sally Kellerman, Liv Ullmann and all those glamorous show biz types. All they want to do is discuss world affairs and beat me at chess and show what great intellects they are. If I needed that I could go out with Ehrlichman or the president of ITT and I wouldn't have to pick up the check."

"What I need is somebody who's glamorous but dumb, though not beneath me. What do you have in the way of a beautiful princess or queen?"

"Well, Doctor, we could probably set you up with Princess Grace for a little illicit backgammon but that might cost you, say, $5 billion in military assistance and a boatload of technical advisers from Las Vegas."

"No, no, I've never forgiven her for beating me at Scrabble."

"Let's see; then how about Golda Meir? She's not a bad little number in a bikini, you know?"

"No thanks. She's one of my best friends and all, but I don't think I'd even want my brother to marry her."

"Wait, Doctor; I've got it. How about Mme. Nguyen Thi Binh? What a coup for you to go out with a Viet Cong official. You could take her bowling or to play miniature golf and show her what life in America is really like."

"Sorry but All and I doubled once with her and Pierre Trudeau. All she wants to do is go to see Jane Fonda movies."

"All we can do then is put you on our waiting list. We'll just need a couple of character references."

"How about Richard Nixon, the president, or John Dean, the White House assistant?"

"What with the Watergate business and all, we'd rather have someone a little more, well, unquestionable."

"How about Frank Sinatra or Jimmy Hoffa?"

"On second thought, Doctor, maybe you'd better try another dating service. Have you considered Mate-O-Matic, "where showoff sweeties meet sugar daddies?"

PERSPECTIVES IN LEARNING

By Hazel Brown

President of Education

HARRY LUNDEBERG SCHOOL

Parents Must Become Involved in Education

There are many times when parents have a desire to become involved in school activities and learning experiences, but they have no way of fulfilling their interests. Perhaps the concerned parents should initiate "The Parent Involvement Program" in their schools.

This Parent Involvement Program is an interesting idea, specially planned to develop a partnership between teachers and parents. It is what the title suggests—an involvement program. The parents can go right into the classroom and actually participate in the educational activities. It gives parents an opportunity to work cooperatively with teachers and students in many learning experiences.

The main objective of the program is to make learning more child-centered and child-oriented. With parents directly involved with teaching and learning, the children are bound to benefit.

Educational programs can be expanded and can become more flexible, because the parents as helpers can greatly increase the attention given individual students. Much individual instruction can take place that could never happen in most crowded classrooms, and many parents have background experiences which can help the students to develop broader interests.

Many school systems are unable financially to give the students the type of individual attention that is needed. Teachers are often willing and eager to try new methods and techniques but cannot do so because of lack of time, help, and support. A parent volunteer or helper can free the teacher so that he can improve instruction. A free helper often gives the teacher the necessary encouragement he needs to expand programs and to experiment in learning activities.

Volunteer parents are busy in many schools doing clerical jobs, checking papers, completing attendance forms, filing materials, and cataloging books. In other schools the parents are working directly with the teachers and students in the classrooms. Many parents read children stories, help them play games, work with hobbies, speak about interests, and many other education-related activities. The activities that parents can become involved in are limitless. The program can be just as creative as the people who participate in it.

Most teachers want parents to be involved and are eager for partnership programs to be developed. Since it is a voluntary concept, all the people involved should feel they want to work cooperatively and that the program will be a valuable asset in opening lines of communication between the school and the home.

Parents who have worked with the Parent Involvement Program have no special qualifications. They are basically interested in education and enjoy working with children in a learning situation. They feel that the community will benefit from a parent-teacher partnership and are willing to try anything to meet their goals. They are responsible and dependable people who work hard and find the rewards to be tremendous.

This program can be a success in any community. It needs only parents who are interested in children and learning. Voluntary projects such as this don't just happen—someone has to be the innovator. Get involved!

EASTER SUNDAY

Easter is a holiday that is enjoyed by all... Christian or otherwise.

To the Christian it marks the resurrection of Jesus Christ and is a beautiful symbol of rebirth and hope to the countless Christians the world over.

To all of us Easter adds up to one thing... a joyful celebration of life. The springtime budding of plants and trees and the birth of the lambs as the icy chill disappears from the earth, are the symbols that attest to Easter.

Symbolism... the religious color is white, the flower the white lily, the symbol of innocence and purity is white, light is joy. The Easter Bunny is a symbol of abundant new life... and the sunrise, (the traditional time for the Easter Service), recalls the legend which tells that the rays of light bursting through the clouds on Easter morning are the angels dancing with joy.

But regardless of Faith or the lack of Faith... this time of the year has to have special meaning as Mother Nature dons a new dress for a new birth.

April 22 is the date of Easter Sunday, it will be a quiet day for most of us. Some, like nature, will don new apparel for the Easter Parade at Ocean City, some will just contemplate the Springtime and plan their new gardens, the young people will engage in Easter Egg hunts and egg rolling contests... but for some the day will be full of worship. For all it is a new chance for lasting peace brightening the hopes of mankind.

If we play our cards right Easter could be forever.

In Our Town...

We are consoled by the knowledge that we have just helped a millionaire pay his income tax.

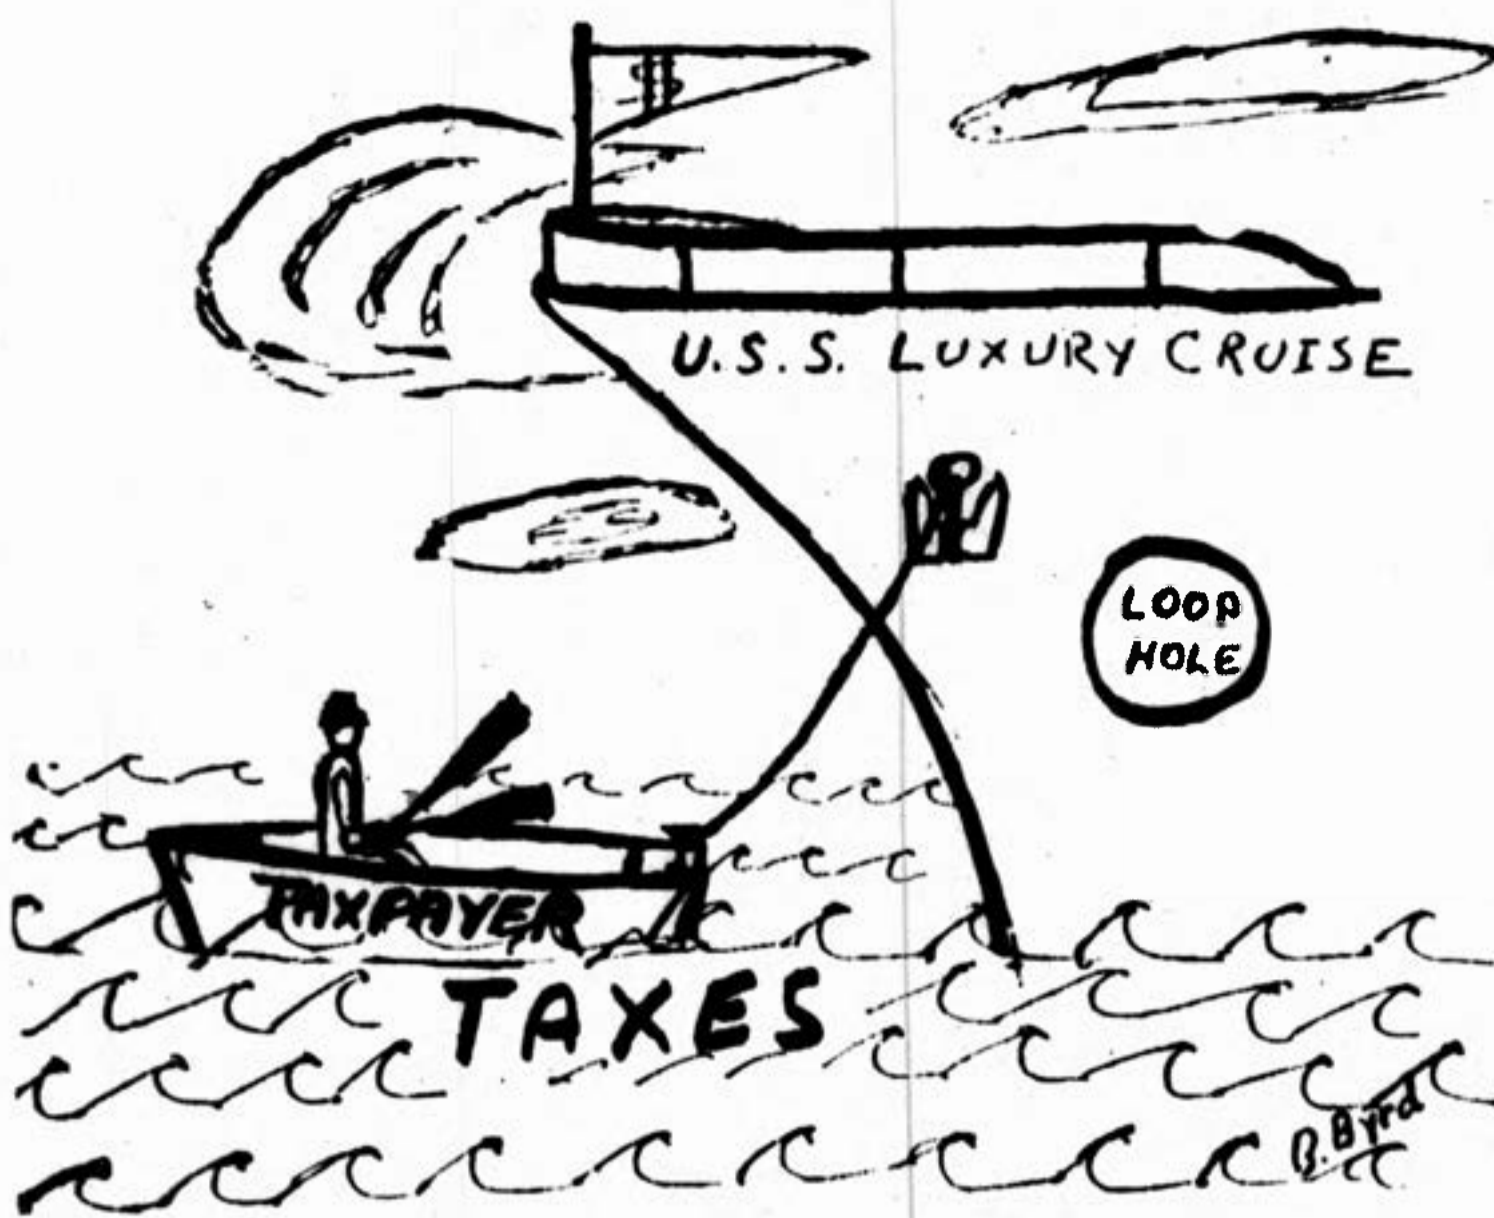

NO PLACE FOR HASTE

Too rapid action on environmental matters without evaluation of the consequences is dangerous in the extreme. Consider the matter of DDT. Used worldwide to control such things as mosquitos in malarial swamps, insect pests plaguing humans and animals, trees and food crops alike, this chemical likely did more than any other single agent in the history of the world to improve human life. Though no accurate estimate is possible, it probably saved hundreds of millions of lives that would otherwise have been lost to disease and starvation. Because of its chemical persistence, the use of DDT was banned virtually overnight, although proof of its harm was uncertain.

What the ultimate consequences of this action may be cannot yet be assessed, but one of them has cropped up in the northwestern part of the United States. In Eastern Oregon and Washington, 400,000 acres of timberland is being threatened by an infestation of the Douglas fir tussock moth. The only man-made cure now known for the problem is a light application of DDT, amounting to only three quarters of a pound to the acre. Destruction of such a volume of timber would be an economic disaster, and there is every reason to expect that the tussock moth will, if not controlled, expand its area of operation even further. To what extent the destruction will spread, no one knows. The federal government may be asked to lift its ban on the use of DDT for this emergency.

Technology provides the tools to tip the scales in the balance of nature to man's favor. It is foolhardy to discard these tools before we have any effective substitutes for them.

ROWING AGAINST THE WIND

The State of Things

By Val Hymes

The Ethics Express

The whistle didn't even blow for this one.

That full disclosure bill that roared through the General Assembly by "accident" was a brand new express train the legislators had never met on the track before. A week later, they were still numb.

The suspense now is whether Governor Mandel will chase down the tracks with a veto, and how he'll pull it off. Veteran legislators have seen many an express roar around the bend in the last hours of a session. Last year it was a racketeer bill. The year before that it was metro. This year they thought it was derailed when the $20 million windfall for the small loan industry was killed, and they figured that another through train slipped by when the liquor mark-up bill was enacted.

But the big one was waiting for the last two hours of the session.

It started out as a moderate effort to require statewide elected officials to disclose their land holdings, introduced in the wake of an Eastern Shore land deal involving the Governor. It turned into probably the most sweeping financial disclosure law in the nation, affecting virtually every Maryland official from Capitol Hill down through the State House and the court houses.

The sponsor, Baltimore Sen. Julian Lapides, had begged his colleagues not to "love the bill to death" by adding judges and Congressmen, thus making it unpalatable. But they did, and more. And when it went to the House, laughter greeted more devastating amendments added by Del. Ruffin Maddox that virtually gutted the original bill.

In place of property disclosure, the bill required a total disclosure of all assets and liabilities of all officials, their wives, and dependent children.

JUST A 'WOUND'

"We weren't trying to kill it," Del. Paul Weisengoff said later. "We were just trying to wound it a little."

When the Senate finally got the bill back on the last night, that body was angry at the House's failure to take it seriously and the amendments were immediately adopted by a unanimous vote. Senate President William S. James quickly called for the final tally, and it came: 32 to 4. But it didn't take long for them to realize what they had done.

As the impact sank in, Sen. Frederick C. Malkus Jr. urged a reconsideration. Senators Lapides and Jervis S. Finney countered with a motion to hold it over for an hour so it wouldn't delay all other bills.

That vote, which put the bill off until 11:57 p.m. was close — 21-19 — but since it prevented a reconsideration, it was the pivotal vote. If they realized what they were doing, a vote to delay was support for the bill.

Voting yes were James, Abrams, Bauman, Bishop, Hymes, Clark, Curran, Dalton, Finney, newspaper comparison of Mandel contributors and contracts awarded by the State.

"I never thought I'd see the day when the General Assembly would pass a full disclosure bill," said Sen. James the next day. "That alone makes it a newsworthy and noteworthy session."

Look again, and quickly, Senator. When you wake up, it may be gone.

IRONY OF THE WEEK

It may have had something to do with its success; the total disclosure bill had the same number in the Senate as House Bill 267, which was pushed by hundreds of homeowners for assessment relief. It failed under the governor's opposition. Senate Bill 267 also deals with assessments — of political and financial influence.

HELD THE CASTLE

"They made a tactical error," explained Finney, who had co-sponsored with Bishop a similar bill that died in the Senate. "They forgot that because there is no gag rule, on the last night every fan is king, and we were occupying the castle."

So there it was, designed to lay bare all the financial pressures, influences, and problems of every official. Governor Mandel said he would sign it — if it's constitutional, and almost immediately the question was raised by his aides how the State could constitutionally impose its law on federal officers.

Would it be retroactive to those in office now? Or would the governor sign it and urge that it not be enforced until the legislature "cleans it up" next year? A couple of dangling amendments may provide enough of a defect to allow for a veto, but it better be good because everybody's watching.

There was every indication that the attorney general's office was scurrying through the law books to find out if there is a loophole that would let hundreds of politicians off the hook. As usual, Mandel attacked the news media when questioned. "You're taking these people," he told newsmen, "and you're saying we're going to invade your privacy, but don't invade ours." Nevertheless, he called it a good bill.

House Speaker Lowe chimed in. "The ridiculous thing about it is if there is a crooked politician, a crook's not going to disclose that he's crooked." Others fear they will find their household belongings prey to burglars. Still others have objected because their wives or husbands must have their private lives uncovered.

The bill covers the governor, comptroller, attorney general, and specifies the treasurer, secretary of state, cabinet members, and their deputies. And it goes to enumerate the legislators, county councilmen, executives and commissioners, mayors, city councilmen, or aldermen, all judges, and all candidates to any of these positions.

JAIL SENTENCE

The disclosure reports must be made to the secretary of state every six months under oath — subject to perjury penalties — and they will be available for "public inspection." Refusal to file could mean a jail sentence or fine.

Two more disclosure bills by Senator Bishop were enacted during what appeared to be this last-minute purge of the session's sorry image. They will require disclosure of purchasers of batches of bull roast or fund-raiser tickets, and of big dealings with the State by campaign contributors, following a the revolutionary terrorists. Dick Wilson, tribal chairman of the Oglala Sioux nation called them "vagabonds and goons who will not work," and he said Indians throughout the U. S. repudiate actions and demands of the militants.

Reds Pulling Strings

The Communists in the United States began talking about using "Indian-Americans" leftists about the same time they began to mobilize small pockets of revolutionary leadership among Mexican-Americans, Puerto Ricans, and other ethnic minority groups. In the 1960's and 60's Reds had failed miserably in their historic mission of "radicalizing" the so-called "working class," the industrial employees of America. American workers didn't accept the Communist classification "proletarians." They accepted none of Communism's "come-ons." Traditional union organizations much earlier had purged themselves of 11 Communist-dominated unions, and even most of the rank and file of these unions (although still led in some cases by Communists) have not joined up with the revolutionaries.

So the Red bosses in Moscow and Peking ordered their American agents to mobilize, agitate and use the minorities. With the "Black Power" cadres and then later with the Black Panthers, the Communists made frightening headway for a while among young Negroes who were fascinated and stimulated by the bold acts of Black mobs confronting police and executing "shoot-outs."

Reign of Terror

Cities were burned in the late 1960's, and after the Panthers came on the scene a link-up with international Communism was brought out into the open. Panthers leaders, part of them convicts and former convicts, preached violent revolution and boasted of being a part of "International Proletarianism" — international Communism.

The mobs got by with their billions of dollars of destruction, looting and sabotaging with scarcely any penalties; police, because of political decisions, were obliged to stand watching while stores and buildings were pillaged. When the anti-war masses, led by Communists, came to Washington the toll of destruction was in the multi-millions, and only on a few occasions were arrests made and penalties assessed. The international acts of terror carried out by "Black September Gang," up until the execution of the U.S. diplomats, wound up in time with the freeing of those caught — sometimes as blackmail paid in subsequent terroristic acts.

The situation is deeply disturbing. Yet it can be corrected here at home by an aroused American citizenry. Are so many of us too apathetic to care? If so aren't we on the way to anarchy?

ON THE WAY TO ANARCHY?

When the Communist-led anti-war hoodlums took over the streets of central Miami Beach last August, wantonly destroyed property and terrorized and brutalized delegates to the Republican National Convention, and yet were not subjected to laws governing other citizens, we said in our columns, radio programs and newsletters that the breakdown of law and order was a national disgrace, an international disgrace.

American that, the so-called American Indian Movement, spurred on by the Communist and other Left-wing revolutionaries, and taking advantage of the international climate of permissiveness, led several hundred Indians into the Indian Bureau in the U.S. Interior Department complex in Washington and took it over. They created one of the most shocking scenes of property destruction ever seen in Washington. They defied the law, stole art objects; and then apparently the marauders were paid to leave, with few, if any being arrested.

Terrorist Defy Law

More recently the international bandits who call themselves the "Black September Gang" (linked with Chinese and Moscow Communist terror-training schools) struck again (after their notorious killings at the Olympics). This time the terrorists kidnaped U. S. Ambassador to The Sudan, Cleo A. Noel, Jr.; his charge d'affaires, George Curtis Moore; Guy Eid, Belgian diplomat, and others and held them in the Saudi Arabian embassy. Later they executed the three named above. A news dispatch said the three has been beaten and kicked, then shot as many as 30 times.

Then the terrorist American Indian Movement struck again, this time taking over the town of Wounded Knee, South Dakota after kidnapping as hostages 11 townspeople. As they had done in the Interior Department in Washington, they wrecked the town of Wounded Knee and defied all authority, all law enforcement. Most of the Indian population in the United States genuinely deplored the action of

Sen. Malkus Reports

Although the session adjourned without enacting a tax hike, Maryland taxpayers have every cause to regard the 1973 General Assembly session as just another fast shuffle for them.

It wasn't so much what was done, but rather what wasn't done.

The Senate gave final approval to my Workfare bill during the recent '73 session, but the House Ways & Means Committee effectively killed it by watering it down.

The Workfare Bill, which I first introduced during the 1972 session, requires able-bodied employable welfare recipients to work on public projects in return for their welfare checks.

Such work would include school, park, road, and recreation facilities maintenance, or other work of this sort that goes undone because state and local government cannot afford to pay for it.

So that Workfare's effectiveness in cutting welfare rolls could be proven... and with the understanding that it would become a fullscale program in 1973... I consented to an amended bill providing that the concept of workfare be tried in Maryland for one year as a pilot program involving 350 recipients.

Wherever Workfare Programs have been implemented, welfare rolls have been reduced.

During the first two months of New York's Workfare Program, 18 per cent of the employable recipients were dropped from welfare rolls for failure to report for work assignment.

A state-wide Workfare program in Maryland will cost $9.5 million to administer, but the state would gain a total of $33.5 million in work done.

I absolutely refuse to consent to any more watered-down Workfare bills.

The effectiveness of wide-scale workfare programs in cutting welfare costs is undeniable.

As far as I'm concerned, efforts to block Workfare from becoming a state-wide, full-scale program constitute criminal neglect of Maryland taxpayers.

According to the April 10th issue of the Morning Sun... "Welfare recipients considered themselves fortunate this year that no bills they regarded as harmful, such as sweeping compulsory workfare plans were enacted."

Well, I guess it is a happy day for the freeloaders. They can still collect public support without working... and the average Maryland taxpayer will have to work a little longer and harder to foot the bill for their support.

I have already pre-filed Workfare for the 1974 session, and I will continue to fight for its passage.

The '73 session began with the Governor's promise to reduce the property tax burden for Maryland homeowners and ended with his firm refusal to have the State foot the bill for such tax relief.

His suggestion that the counties could implement tax relief, if the counties footed the bill for it is too ridiculous to even discuss any further.

The $6.7 million 18-month lottery budget stands out as one of the most brazen spending aprees ever proposed by an agency of state government. But administrative lobbying pressure turned on full force to keep the wildly extravagant budget from any cuts whatsoever... And they almost succeeded, 100 per cent.

The Legislature cut only a mere $405,000 from the bloated lottery budget.

The proposed Baltimore City Sports Complex boondoggle made a brief appearance on the '73 legislative scene amid promises from Sports Authority members and the State administration that no public funds will be spent to construct the super stadium complex.

I find this very difficult to swallow.

In fact, I absolutely refuse to believe it... especially in view of the consultant's feasibility report which states rather emphatically that there is no way to build the stadium without using taxpayer's dollars.

More than the means and groans of all the bleeding heart liberals, an obnoxious hang-up with the question of constitutionality caused the defeat of mandatory death penalty legislation.

I regard the failure of the '73 session to reinstate the death penalty in Maryland as a black mark in Maryland's legislative history.

There were some bright spots in the '73 session, including the defeat of several proposals to establish state control of land use, the enactment of legislation providing a $3 million state bond issue to provide three cemeteries for burial sites for Maryland veterans, and the passage of a bill to clamp a 500 job ceiling on the number of state jobs the Board of Public Works can create sessions of the General Assembly.

During the '73 session, I sponsored two measures (SJR 5 and SJR 83, both enacted into law, which combine together to establish a speeding and feeding program to take affirmative steps to replenish Maryland's diminishing stock of game and wild fowl.

One measure deals with the raising of young game and fowl and the other with the feeding of wild water fowl.

6JR 5 proposes a plan, whereby ducklings will be supplied by the Department of Natural Resources to selected individuals, conservation groups, Boy Scouts, etc. to raise.

The Maryland Farm Bureau, Maryland 4-H Clubs, The Future Farmers of America, and several hunting groups have already volunteered to assist in the program.

SJR 83 provides for the feeding of wild water fowl. The bill sets up a volunteer feeding program which recruits interested Maryland citizens who secure a permit from the Department of Natural Resources.

In passing both bills, members of the Senate charged the Department of Natural Resources with carrying out the full intent of the newly enacted legislation.

There's been enough surveys and research and talk about saving Maryland's diminishing rich resource of game and wild fowl.

It's high time we took decisive action to replenish this rich resource before it reaches the point of no return.

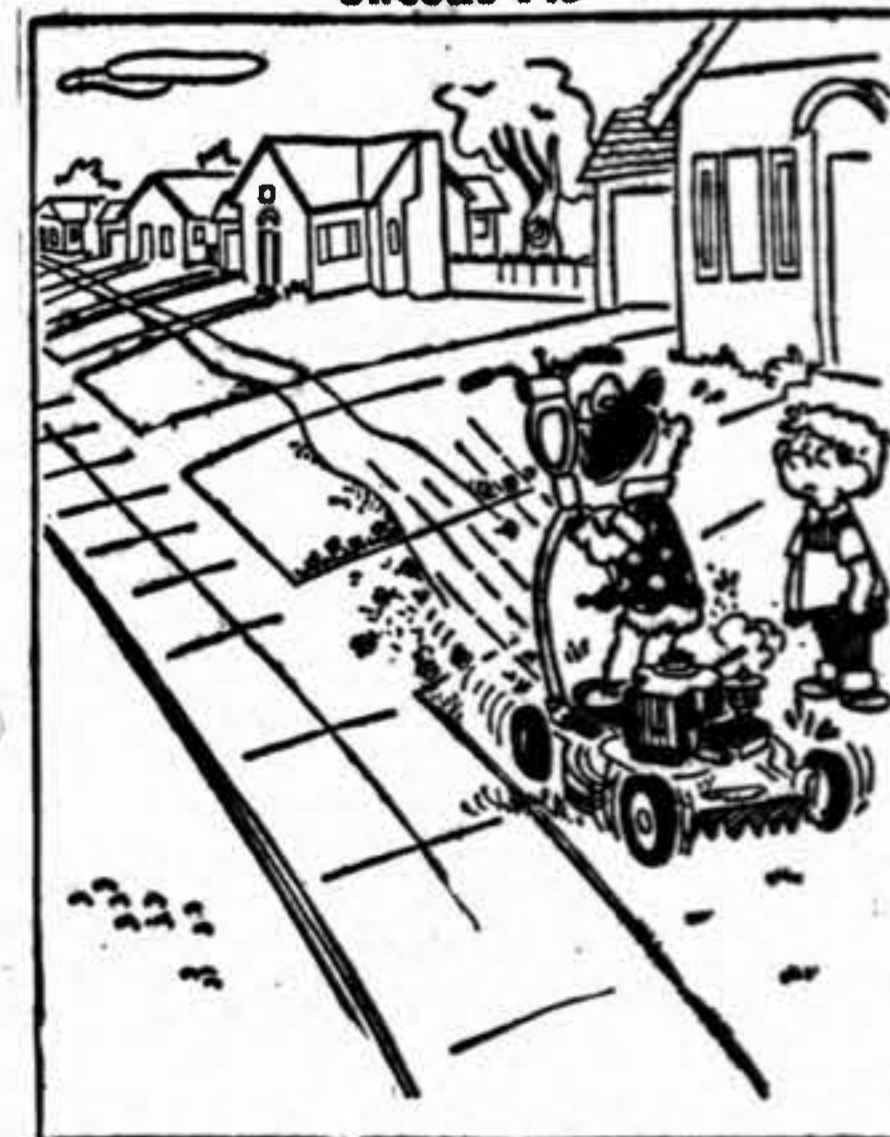

The time for talk has passed. The time for action is at hand.

Dear Dick:

How can we fight inflation by raising everyone's wages with new increases in the minimum wage law. What we need is wage and price controls on government.

SALARY DATA

A Bill clarifying the state's Freedom of Information statute to insure public disclosure of salaries paid all state, county and municipal employees has been enacted by the legislature.

Sponsored by Sen. Robert A. Pascal, R-Anne Arundel the measure simply amends the FOI Act to include in the definition of "public record" the salary data of these public employees.

Sen. Pascal introduced the bill as a result of a controversy in Anne Arundel County over the salaries paid in the public schools. School authorities sought to hide the information from taxpayers, citing a technicality in the language of the law.

Similar efforts to keep the public in the dark about the salaries paid teachers and other public employees have occurred elsewhere in Maryland in the past, so Sen. Pascal's bill is a welcome one. It should put an end to attempts by bureaucrats to keep taxpayers in the dark. —Baltimore News American

GRASSROOTS OPINION

CHEROKEE OKLA., MESS- ENGER: "Now there is talk of doing away with the ad valorem tax for supporting schools because rich districts can afford better schools than the poorer ones... Now, 'ain't that a lick... One of the first facts of life that my dad taught me was that 'the rich eat better than the poor—so you'd better get to work and make some money if you want to eat real good'... Sounds sort of old-fashioned today."

WASHINGTON REPORT
FROM SENATOR J. GLENN BEALL JR.

Reshaping Our Trade Policies

American factories and businesses produce more goods than any other nation in the world, and while a great deal of these products go directly to the American consumer, much of our economy and our high standard of living depends on trade with foreign nations.

Because of the tremendous efficiency of our industrial and agricultural industries, and with all other things being equal, we have been able to come out well ahead where trade is concerned.

At least until recently. But now we are finding ourselves blocked from foreign markets by tariffs, border taxes and other non-tariff barriers such as import quotas. And at the same time, we have found more and more foreign imports on our markets — in many cases from nations that have prevented us from competing within their domestic market.

These problems have come into being since the last major international trade agreements of a decade ago, and President Nixon is now asking Congress to act on legislation that would enable the United States to adjust its policies and bring a new balance to international trade.

The first point of the President's program is a request for negotiating authority to eliminate, reduce or increase import taxes on foreign goods for a period of five years.

With this authority at his fingertips, the President will be able to bargain more effectively with other nations that have either been flooding our markets with their products, or have been preventing our goods from being imported and sold at competitive prices in their countries.

He is also asking for the authority to negotiate agreements on non-tariff barriers, such as import quotas, and has proposed a method by which Congress can act swiftly ly to ratify the agreements. Another aspect of the trade legislation is the President's request for the discretion to temporarily impose or reduce import restrictions for balance of payments reasons or to restrain inflation.

This stand-by power can be of great value in a world that moves as fast as ours does today, and without this flexibility we might find our hands tied when trying to cope with unexpected events.

And finally, the President has asked for the authority to grant most favored nation status for trade with the Soviet bloc and certain other nations. His proposal would allow Congress to review the policy each year in order to decide on whether it should be extended.

This is an alternative to the so-called Jackson Amendment to prohibit "favored nation" status for the Soviet Union as long as it imposes heavy emigration fees on Jews who are seeking to leave Russia and live in Israel.

I have cosponsored the Jackson Amendment, and I have made it clear that I oppose the taxes being imposed on the Soviet Jews. This will be one of the principal issues to be settled as the trade bill is being considered, and I believe that the Soviet government has become aware of our position and is responding by taking steps to remove most of the emigration taxes.

This legislation also will set the tone for American interests, once the international trade negotiations get underway this year, so I am confident that it will receive prompt and thorough consideration in the weeks ahead.

The bill is an initiative for international free trade, but it is based on the mutual reduction of trade barriers. It says that the United States will open its markets only as long as other nations are willing to open theirs.

A Grave Responsibility

In the United States Constitution it pretty clearly spells out that there shall be no interference with free interstate commerce.

In this new Congress one of the gravest responsibilities it could fulfill would be to ensure that at no time in the future will labor disputes be permitted to disrupt commerce.

Back in the early 30's when the communist party was most active in the labor movement with the old Trade Union Unity League one of the major items of dogma was that if control could be exercised over the national transportation, there would be no need for anything such as a general strike, as the economy of the nation would come to a standstill.

In the past few years, between railroad, trucking, and shipping strikes, commerce has been throttled for long periods of time which resulted in crippling, or destruction, of both independent business and jobs.

Especially hard hit at times has been the state of Hawaii, which of course, depends heavily on maritime shipping, and so to a lesser degree, does the state of Alaska.

© National Federation of Independent Business

The nation's independent business people, voting through the National Federation of Independent Business, have on several occasions supported by heavy majorities legislation which would end this economic destruction, often created by less than 10,000 people.

Last year it looked quite promising to enact legislation that would require both parties to such a dispute to submit to binding arbitration. Late in the Congressional year, this drive was shelved, apparently in view of the forthcoming election.

Of course, the argument against such legislation is that it would infringe on the right of free bargaining between employer and employee. But what is overlooked in this entire concept is that of the rest of the population's right to enjoy a free flow of commerce.

In January new Federal officials were sworn into office, including Congress, pledging to uphold the Constitution.

It is long past the time when this pledge should be honored by taking all steps necessary so that never in the future will commerce between states be brought to a halt by a protracted labor dispute.

Center Stage Production Wins Acclaim

Eastern Shoremen had an opportunity this week to see professional theater at its best when Baltimore's Center Stage brought its romantic melodrama Robert E. Sherwood's "The Petrified Forest" to the University of Maryland, Eastern Shore Branch, Princess Anne. This was the attraction Monday and Tuesday nights.

Mimes and Pantomimes was the scheduled attraction for Wednesday evening in Kiah Hall. Featured in this program are Bert Houle and Sophie Wibaux under the direction of Peter W. Culman and John Stix. The touring company of 27 plan an eight week's tour through five states in 12 residencies as in Princess Anne.

The National Endowment for the Arts is assisting the Center Stage in this pilot program to promote regional theater, and also to stimulate interest in the cultural arts in the places visited.

Mr. Sherwood's play was a hit play of the 1935 season on Broadway. He was a 4-time Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright. "The Petrified Forest" is more than a melodrama or romance with gangster shooting up the cafe and terrifying everyone. Underneath the plot, is disillusionment with life and a yearning for a better future.

The setting is a roadside cafe and filling station in the Arizona desert, near the Petrified Forest. The plot centers around the love story of the owner's daughter, Gabby, and an ex-gigolo bumming his way to California, who stops for food. The third character in the triangle is Boze, a young athlete employed as gas attendant, who competes with the ex-gigolo and writer, for the affections of Gabby.

The sheltered world of the desert is shattered by the arrival of Duke Mantee, infamous killer and his gang of outlaws who seek shelter in the cafe during their flight from the law. From then to the end there is much shooting, shooting terrorizing and excitement.

The lunchroom setting for the play was most realistic, complete with juke box, bottled stove propped up in the corner, lunch counter and tables and chairs, with drink and cigar ads, wall telephone, all presided over by a stuffed moose head.

About the actors, all gave a professional interpretation of their parts and furnished an evening of first class entertainment with humor, excitement, high glee, and stark terror intermingled. Beneath all, is an undercurrent of disenchantment with the worlds of the characters, a concern for the state of things, and a hope for better things.

Richard Dix, veteran actor, is delightful as Gramp Maple. See "CENTER STAGE" page 8

By James L. Hinman

Congressman James Grover (R-N.Y.) recently said that he thought it was time to stand up and say something good about America, that we've heard enough from all the ingrates who would destroy a nation they never helped to build. We agree. Why are some of our news media so reluctant to ever say anything good about America? And why do some of our most vocal members of Congress appear to become tongue-tied, overcome with shyness, when events make propitious a time to say something good about this country?

We think that now is a propitious time to say something good about this nation, and about its President who understood that begging was not the posture from which this nation conducts its business. We know that all Americans are thankful that we have achieved peace with honor in Vietnam, and profoundly thankful that our POW's are being returned to us under circumstances befitting their dignity and the honor they deserve. We think Capt. Jeremiah Denton, as the spokesman for the first returning POW's, expressed the true feelings of the great majority of Americans, and American servicemen, when he said, "We are proud to have served our country under circumstances most difficult. We are grateful for the firm resolve of the American people and our Commander in Chief. God bless America." All we can add to Capt. Denton's remarks is a resounding amen.

Delmarva's chicken industry means much to local grain farmers. Last year the 320 million broilers raised on the Eastern Shore required 10 million bushels of soybeans and 30 million bushels of corn. Most of this grain was produced right here on Delmarva. Premium prices for local corn averaged about 20 cents a bushel and 10 cents for beans above U.S. average farm prices.

Christian Science

WHAT CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CAN DO FOR A FAMILY

What Christian Science can do for a family. It can bring an understanding of God's closeness and care, helping each one in the family in everything he does. It can develop a deep love for the Bible, and joyful obedience to God's law. It can teach every member, and the family together, to heal problems in the way Jesus showed.

How can Christian Science do all this? Through Sunday School classes that strengthen children. Through Wednesday testimony meetings where personal accounts of healing are shared. Through Reading Rooms where truths are pondered in quiet.

Won't you invite Christian Science into your family's life?

Christian Science church services are held every Sunday at First Church of Christ, Scientist, Salisbury, Maryland, located on the corner of Smith Street and South Blvd. at 11 A. M. The subject of the lesson is "Probation After Death."

To CATV Customers In Princess Anne

As most of you know, Shore Television Company, Inc., purchased the Princess Anne CATV system about a year ago. Since that date we have at a considerable cost, replaced all the amplifiers with the latest type transistorized equipment, replaced some of the transmission lines, and bought head-end replacements to adapt to microwave signals. We now have a modern cable system in Princess Anne.

However, in order to supply our customers with clear, reliable pictures we need microwave reception. Our application for Federal Communication Commission approval of microwave was filed as soon as purchase was final. Final approval by FCC has not been received but we have every confidence this will be received just as soon as two minor complications are cleared up. We cannot at this point predict a firm date but we do assure you that we are doing everything within our power to get final approval.

We want you to know of these matters and of our firm intention to provide quality microwave television pictures to our Princess Anne customers at the earliest possible date.

A WISE DECISION

We wish to commend the Somerset County Commissioners on their decision to check and study the costs involved in building a new County Health Center on the land offered to them by the Fair Board on Crisfield Lane.

This decision is a sound one as it places this facility at the County Seat where it is now located along with the many other services offered by the County and State governments.

When the proposal was first advanced by the late Dr. Fritz, at least one Commissioner advocated that it be located at a site owned by the County between Westover and Kingston.

This site has been suggested time after time for almost every proposal advanced by the County. Princess Anne is the County Seat and is so located because of its convenience to the people of the County. When citizens come to the County Seat for one service they may at the same time find it convenient to take care of other business that they may have at the Court House, the Health Office, the Extension Office, the Farm Loan office or the Soil Conservation District as well as other services. County Seat means the seat of all government services for the convenience of the people.

To spread the services all over the countryside cannot be considered as wise.

It is our suggestion that the County dispose of the excess property that they have obtained at the site of the proposed vocational school. If it is true, as one Commissioner suggested, that they obtained this property at a more than reasonable price, they may make a substantial profit that would help the taxpayers meet the costs of other proposed services.

Dear Dick:

You could write a book on Watergate but the "Post" already has.

YOU DESERVE A SHAKE TODAY

Any major intersection must have two hamburger stands and two gas stations. This is because the American dream consists of eating and running. Now all these stands can't just fry meat and put it in a bun. They must dress it up in a gimmick.

You can no longer buy a hamburger. Our family's favorite stand calls its hamburger a Belt-Buster. So I order five Belt-Busters and Triple-Thick Shakes.

While we wait, they bring in the gimmick—a heaping basket of peanuts to eat as the hamburgers cook. Not too exciting Ha!

You crack open the peanut and pointedly, purposefully, intentionally throw the shell on the floor. That's right, just lob it any old where—over the shoulder, ten feet in the air, off your sister's head.

Such ankle-deep-in-peanutshells behavior is not tolerated in decent restaurant, like Mom's dining room. Our little ones have been dismissed before dessert for premeditated burps.

But, ah, the release of flagrantly, willfully heaving those peanut husks any old where—a reprieve from the limits of the law.

Everybody needs a time and place to throw shells.

The State of Things

By Val Hymes

The Lau-making Orgy

As usual, the Maryland General Assembly churned through more than 3000 bills and resolutions, enacting only a fraction of them, but found time to give the State an official bug, the Baltimore Checkerspot butterfly, and to try to ban Jane Fonda.

tered on a handful of issues — most which failed — in spite of all the rhetoric. In fact, the bills that failed in this 1973 session may have more significance than what succeeded because many of the bills that make political candidates uneasy in front of a crowd will be coming back to haunt them in the 1974 session — the year of reckoning at the polls. "We were able to resist the temptation to enact new programs and along with them the new taxes required to support them," Governor Mandel purred in his closing night message to the legislature.

And he promptly took steps to begin working on new plans and legislation for defeated bills he endorsed — land use control and mandatory death penalties; land use through executive coordination and enforcement of existing powers; the death penalty through the Legislative Council.

In these two issues, as in several others, there is an interesting link with the federal courts or the Congress that seems to have put the State in a race to either fill a void in Maryland law caused by a court ruling or to enact a state law before Capitol Hill orders it done. And in debate after debate, constitutional questions were raised, as the lawmakers struggled to interpret court guidelines and rulings.

STARS OF SESSION

The stars of the session were the rent control, child abuse and disclosure bills.

But it was a bittersweet victory for the consumer, who lost bills regulating television and automobile repairmen; for Social Services lobbyists who lost a departmental child abuse bill and for elections officials who lost one centralizing campaign finance records in Annapolis in spite of the three successful disclosure bills that rocked the State House dome in the last hours.

The hundreds of property owners who were frustrated in their efforts to see their favorite bills enacted have promised to utilize those new laws in 1974 to take revenge in the assessments issue — another one in which the charge "un-constitutional" was sounded.

County officials, who flexed new lobbying muscles in this session to defeat the land use bills, promise next to present their own legislative programs to avoid being placed on the defensive. The subdivisions failed to earn the long-sought hospital payments for the poor, but see the beginning of the takeover of welfare costs and the assessors' offices, except that the counties and City still must provide space.

And the subdivisions through the Governor's education measures will experience drastic changes in financing education for all pupils, including the handicapped.

ABORTION, PAROCHIAL

The church lobby won one and lost one as the abortion and parochial bills failed. Steady lobbying killed the bill that would have regulated where and by whom abortions could be done, leaving Maryland with no restrictions in the wake of the Supreme Court guidelines.

And the anti-busing folks were bitterly disappointed as every measure they backed died either in filibusters or in long waits for committees to act.

A package to create a State strike force against organized crime failed. It would have operated where the federal force cannot move in gambling, narcotics, pornography and loan sharking. But finally — yet not until the Watergate affair — a wire tapping bill succeeded to bring the State into line with federal law.

Blue law repealers failed State-wide, but some counties wiped out or softened theirs. Young people will be adults at 18 in July except in bars. Only Prince George's, Montgomery and St. Mary's opened tavern doors to them — but only for beer and wine.

The environmental bills, however, took the hardest knocks. Almost everything was scratched; the jumbo billboard and flip-top can bans, Ocean City dune protection and flood prevention, and the right for citizens to sue polluters. And the strip mine ban.

The same fate befell all auto safety bills, from seat belts to auto inspections. The latter's failure puts a serious crimp in the State's air pollution plans.

PENALTIES TOUGHER

But a quiet bill, bringing Maryland into line with the U.S. stiffened civil and criminal penalties for polluters. And another calls for environmental impact studies every time the State builds a highway or okays a power plant.

All gambling bills failed, while the legislators fussed and finally gave in to Mandel's lottery budget. No-fault insurance and cable TV regulation died, but a package to modernize the State treasurer's office went through. And a move toward no-fault divorce succeeded by shortening required separation time. But the renewable marriage contract failed again, while successful were bills banning homosexual marriages and requiring court clerks to give birth control information on request to marriage licensees.

The new school district for institutionalized citizens was delayed, but a new commission to identify and prevent hereditary disorders got through, as did a day care program for the elderly and preschool education.

Women, veterans, and judges left Annapolis with mixed results, while the press left with nothing at all in the way of a "shield" bill. But they did clutch a handful of juicy clippings from debates on special interest bills and Del. Scott's dramatic arrest.

The upshot of it all is that more local bills dealing with clerks' salaries, street lights, and the local high school's big basketball win were enacted than those with Statewide impact.

Which means the General Assembly once again took part in a 90-day paper-shuffling orgy that cost plenty and once again spotlights the merits of home rule.

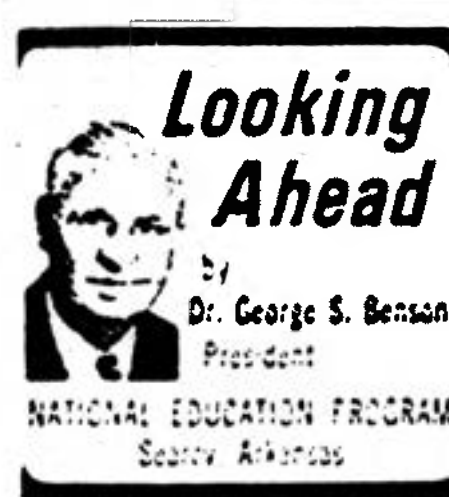

KUDOS to the Center for Public Broadcasting for earning a community service award for a low budget and "highly effective" program on deafness.

VAL HYMES A SDX AWARD WINNER

Valerie Hymes, M&H columnist, is the recipient of one of National Sigma Delta Chi's 16 Distinguished Service Awards. Val's award was for her on-the-spot radio coverage of the Governor Wallace shooting, carried world-wide by CBS. Washington Post reporters Carl Bernstein and Robert Woodward were also winners.

GRASSROOTS OPINION

PULASKI, N. Y., DEMOCRAT: "It has been said that the American people are more skeptical than they used to be. I certainly hope so! Americans are noted for naïveté, which has made them victims of far too much devious dealing by politicians, fast talking peddlers and smooth deliverers of the 'gospel truth' that they really don't know the 'truth' when they see it... truth being relative anyway, depending on which way you look at a subject. It behooves us all to be skeptical."

INSIDERS CRITICIZE MEDIA

Many of the nationally-known journalists who are today attacking "biased news handling" and "advocacy journalism" are warning those who are using their media for such unethical practices that they are endangering the freedom of the whole profession. These voices inside the profession not only abhor biased handling of news but they fear that the growing public awareness of it may lead to government or political censorship of news.

James Borman, News Director of WCCO-TV, Minneapolis, is one of these. His credentials are the highest; he is past President of the Radio-TV News Directors Association, a veteran of 38-years in journalism. "I feel compelled today," he told the 25th International Conference of RTNDA, "to defend our kind of journalism (the ethical kind) from attack — not the attacks from critics outside journalism, but the assault on journalistic practices from within... If we lose our credibility, we have lost everything. And that's exactly what is happening — both to newspapers and to a lesser extent to the broadcast media..."

"Join the Riots!"

"David Brinkley is quoted as saying that complete objectivity is unattainable. And there are those — some of them in journalism school — who use that quote to describe objectivity as a myth. Instead of holding it up to students as a goal to be sought, even though it may be elusive, they scorn it as a hindrance to the new kind of journalism they're teaching. "That kind of journalism has been described variously as the journalism of involvement, advocacy journalism, or activist journalism. Alex Kendrick spoke of it at a CBS news affiliates session I attended. He said he thought a good reporter in the modern milieu should not be afraid, while covering a riot, to throw a few bricks himself... It seems to me this kind of advice gives a clear clue to what has gone wrong in our craft... For whatever else the new journalism may be called, the accurate name of it is 'dishonest reporting.'"

Worthy of Freedom

It wasn't easy for James Borman to say what he did in an audience of radio and television journalists; he told them so, and then he said: "Perhaps I'll be dismissed as a traditionalist. I hope not. I hope that the years I have invested in journalism have not led to the threshold of a phony, plastic kind of reporting that puts the prejudices of the reporter above the right of the people to be reliably informed." This is putting it straight and clear. Not only have the people the right to know (the cry of the ones accused of biased journalism) but the people must be assured that they are being reliably (honest, fairly, and objectively) informed. This is the responsibility of a press if it is to be worthy of First Amendment freedom.

Robert D. Novak, the nationally syndicated columnist, has the courage that moved James Borman to speak up. At a conference on "The Mass Media and Modern Democracy," Novak charged the major organs of news dissemination with unethical "advocacy journalism." He said the public was becoming aware of "The New Journalism" and would move toward suppressing its freedom if biased news handling continues.

Part of Liberal Establishment "This deepening change in mass attitudes toward the communications media," he told his audience of journalism, "in turn, reflected (through the late 1960's and early 1970's) a gradual transformation in the media. The change was not dramatic transformation but an acceleration of trends begun some 25 years earlier. It consisted basically of two developments. First, the journalist working for the television networks, the big news magazines and the important metropolitan press has now become part of the liberal establishment, both in his manner of living and in his ideological commitment. Second, in a later and less fully developed trend, these journalists were increasingly advocating causes of the moment rather than functioning as neutral observers. Taken together, the developments widened the gap between the mass media and the great mass of citizens, a gap that can only result in diminished credibility by the media and, therefore, the inadequate fulfillment of the necessary function by the press in a democratic society."

The function of the press is the objective dissemination of news. If it fails in this function, it betrays its profession and its freedom.

50 YEARS AGO THIS WEEK

"David Brinkley is quoted as saying that complete ob. BY THE EDITOR"

This week the Marylander and Herald enters its 149th year of continuous publication, and this reminded me that our family moved to Princess Anne just fifty years ago this year. My father had been in Princess Anne for over a year when we moved here and he was operating the newspaper as editor and co-publisher. He, years before that, had learned his trade as an apprentice on this same paper when Frank Jones was the foreman.

I started school here in the grammar school at Washington High where the auction block is now located. My brother was in the Princess Anne Elementary School which was located on Prince William Street in the Stanford home across from Teackle Mansion.

Our family lived on Beechwood Street next to Sid Revell's store and I went through a lane and a tunnel to get to school. I looked in the files of 1923 for this week's issue to remind myself as to how it was in Princess Anne fifty years ago this week.

One of the great events of my youth was the annual PAL Field Day when the various schools of the county met for track and field events. This was no new experience for me as Wicomico Schools also staged a like event. All of the State winners then met in competition at College Park to determine the state champion. An item in this week's paper announced the coming date Tuesday, May 1 at Washington High School.

William Fitzgerald in Princess Anne and Harry T. Phoebus in Orleto, were offering Ford touring cars at $298 F.O.B. Detroit. Dodge Touring cars were being sold in Salisbury at $695 and cars inclosed with glass windows were selling up to $2,195 by Dodge.

The Rev. M. Marine was encouraging youth activities at the Antioch Church with marble tournaments and we were members of a scout troop meeting in the basement of the parsonage. We had no active scoutmaster and planned all of our own hikes and activities. Adults to help young people were just as hard to find fifty years ago as they are now.

I remember that we went to the movies on the second floor of the Auditorium Theatre and B. H. Dougherty was the owner. He had a soda fountain on the first floor. This building was located next door to the Bank of Somerset.

Babe and Hamp Wilson also had a soda fountain on Main Street and other firms were Jones and Colborn and T. J. Smith Drug Stores, W. O. Lankford, Department Store, Mrs. Beahler, hat making, Cohn & Bock and others. J. T. Taylor was still offering wagons and carriages along with their hardware line.

Staffers Department Store had opened in the store formerly owned by Mr. Dashiell, o-ated in the building next door to this newspaper. In fact, the rear part of the Marylander and Herald was one time a part of the department store and Mrs. Beahler had her millinery store on the second floor of this annex.

Durant cars were being sold at Auto Sales Co., next to the Washington Hotel and the firm also sold Studebakers.

Cohn & Bock Co. and C. H. Hayman along with their regular offerings were the building material dealers.

John W. Morris and Sons were located in the building now occupied by McLean's and they were selling suits at $16.50 and $18.00. They were all wool as Dupont had not started making chemical material.

The States Attorney was L. Creston Beauchamp and Sheriff Charles S. Dryden and his deputies, Paul Sterling and Ralph Dryden left this week-by train to deliver prisoners tried in the April Term of the Circuit Court to the Maryland Penitentiary, Robert F. Duer, father of Judge Mac Duer was the Judge here.

The paper announced that dedication ceremonies for the new McCready Memorial Hospital at Crisfield were to be held May 6. Mrs. McCready had arrived here to take part in the ceremony. Mrs. McCready had the hospital built in honor of her husband who was killed at a railroad crossing near Marion.

It was announced that a newly organized firm was building a new ice manufacturing company here. The Princess Anne Ice Co., would succeed Stacey and Lankford whose plant was destroyed by fire. The two men would be active in the new company.

I remember a story about this fire. My father had just joined the Princess Anne Volunteer Fire Company and on the night of the fire he was given a flag and told to stop all trains as the fire hose was laid across the tracks. Dad asked, suppose it doesn't stop? He was told to get right out there in front of it. "It's your job to stop it. Dad, the next morning, resigned from active membership."

A story recounts the death of Mrs. Elizabeth L. Jones in Baltimore. She was the mother of Robert H. Jones, Jr., this county and by a previous marriage to Dr. Tull, the mother of Dr. Edward E. Tull of New York and Mrs. J. Henry Bailey of Baltimore. Upon Dr. E. E. Tull's retirement he moved to the Tull Farm near here.

Letter To The Editor

Letter To The Editor

The Social Welfare Policies and Issues class at Salisbury State College recently presented the college community with facts concerning the issue of Federal budget cuts, the dismantling of the Office of Economic Opportunity, and how these cuts will affect Wicomico and Worcester Counties. After holding a meeting and passing out literature, we asked for their support in the form of signing a petition suggesting that a portion of the Revenue Sharing Funds be used to establish a community action agency to serve the poor, needy and disadvantaged in the community.

Although we are aware that this was an informal, random survey, we felt the need to present our findings and share our observations. During our informal canvassing on April 5 and 6, we found that both faculty and students were generally uninformed about the problem. Our study revealed that the college community lacked information rather than concern.

When given the facts, a majority (86 per cent) of the 379 people surveyed were in favor of establishing a community action agency and demonstrated their interest by signing the petition. Only 14 per cent were either opposed or not willing to commit themselves on a decision to use part of Revenue Sharing Funds to aid the needy.

Although we received significant support in the form of signatures; some people told us and many implied that they would not be able to offer other means of support either in time or money. It is appropriate to ask how realistic President Nixon's New Federalism is. Will it have the kind of involvement, participation and commitment from the citizenry which is essential to make the program operational?

Sincerely, Kay Hansen Social Welfare Policies and Issues Class Salisbury State College

A Primer on Pensions

Nearly half of our nation's labor force, or over 30 million Americans, participate in an employee pension program of one type or another, and an additional 6 million retired persons are now receiving annuities from these private pension plans.

For the most part these are good programs, and they are of great value in supplementing the retirement benefits that are provided through Social Security.

More and more people are joining these programs as they plan ahead for their retirement, and they have made private pensions a big business, with assets in the neighborhood of $160 billion.

Yet even though these programs are managed reasonably well, there are still certain shortcomings in the present system. Because of the growing concern over the way these pension plans are set up, and in order to bring about some uniformity in the structure of pension programs, it appears likely that legislation will be passed this year to establish some fundamental standards for pension programs.

Pension reform has already been under consideration on Capitol Hill for several years, and the Senate will soon be acting on a pension reform act which I have cosponsored and worked on as a member of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

Vesting is one of the major subjects being dealt with in the pension bill.

Vesting means that an employee should be able to accumulate a certain amount of his pension entitlement as he works his way towards eligibility for a full pension.

In practical terms, it means that an employee could become eligible for a portion of his pension even if he changes jobs.

These are several different ways of determining how long a person should take part in a pension plan before he is vested, but the consensus is that it should be done.

There also is general agreement that a person should be able to transfer his pension rights when he changes jobs. This is called portability.

It means, for example, that a person working for five years at Company X would be able to change jobs and go to work for Company Y and have five years of pension credit in Company Y's retirement program. Of course, there might have to be some adjustment for different pension programs at the two companies, but at least he wouldn't be starting from scratch again.

Although this is a widely-supported idea, the practical questions of how to achieve it are proving more difficult, and there may not be any standards for portability in this year's bill.

It is virtually certain, however, that regulations will be adopted to make pension programs accountable and self-sustaining.

In view of the vast amounts of money involved in private pension programs, it is important to have complete annual reports on all pension funds and their officers. There also should be standards on funding so that enough money will be built up in a pension fund to pay all retirement benefits even if a company goes out of business.

Along this line, there is a possibility of establishing a federally-backed termination insurance program to guarantee the payment of vested benefits in cases where a pension fund is terminated when a company goes out of business.

With more and more Americans joining pension programs to provide for their future security, there should be guarantees that everyone gets a fair return on his investment, and it is time for Congress to see that this is done.

TO DRILL FOR OIL ON SHORE

The proposal of a Pennsylvania firm to drill for oil or natural gas in Dorchester County is far from the first such effort in Maryland, according to the Department of Natural Resources.

A total of 162 wells have been drilled in search of oil or natural gas, according to a 1970 report by DNR's Maryland Geological Survey.

The name of the firm applying for the permit on Taylor's Island in Dorchester County, is Equity Service Corporation, 725 GSB Building, Bala Cynwyd, Pa., a Main Line suburb of Philadelphia.

Before a decision on the application is made, the Maryland Geological Survey will take these steps:

1. Check the application for completeness and accuracy.
2. Seek the advice of the Attorney General as to the legal sufficiency of the manner in which the application was filed.
3. Seek comment from other DNR agencies, as well as other interested state departments, concerning the application.
4. Hold a public hearing.

A letter to Dr. Kenneth N. Weaver, director of MGS, accompanied the application. It was signed by Frank App, Jr., president of the Spartan Engineering Co., of Bridgeton, N.J., which is acting as consultant to Equity Service.

Also forwarded to Dr. Weaver was a plat showing the location of the proposed drilling site. It is on Taylor Island east of Maryland Route 16 near Piney Neck Marsh. Nearest community is Smithville.

A check was enclosed with the application. It was for $2,500 and made out to the Maryland Geological Survey. It was on the account of Equity Service and signed by "Karen I. Melkia." Mr. App asked the check be accepted in lieu of a bond.

It is possible that the Department of Health and Mental Hygiene might comment.

While a public hearing is not mandatory, both Dr. Weaver and James B. Coulter, Secretary of Natural Resources, have said no decision will be made until such a hearing is held.

Dr. Weaver envisions such a hearing being held in the area, perhaps Cambridge. Adequate public notice would be given, he said.

Dr. Weaver said processing of the application, including the public hearing, examination by other agencies, would take from three to five months.

The land upon which the proposed drilling site is located is leased by Equity Service. According to the plat, it is owned by Sewell R. Matthews, et al, 111 Maryland Avenue, Cambridge.

The deepest wells in Maryland were drilled on the Eastern Shore in search of oil.

One, near Ocean City, bottomed at 7,710 feet. Another in Worcester County went down 7,130 feet and a third, east of Salisbury in Wicomico County, measured 5,498 feet deep.

The search for oil failed.

Natural gas is another story. It has been found in four fields in the Appalachian region of Western Maryland. Which produce a modest annual volume of 978 million cubic feet valued at $250,000.

Three of the fields are in Garrett County and one undeveloped field in Allegany County.

First evidence of natural gas in Maryland was found in 1944 near Accident.

Later, producing wells were drilled near Mountain Lake Park and on Negro Mountain both in Garrett County.

Depth of producing wells range from 3,222 to 4,512 feet.

ing was in the court house yard. Sheriff Dashiell was powerless to prevent the man from being dragged from the jail. King had killed a popular youth at Twigg's store on the road from Allen to Upper Ferry.

The youth, Herman Kenny, was having some banter with a colored youth in the store. King, observing from outside, called the white to come out of the store, "using rough language." They did, and King shot a ball into Kenny's abdomen. He was carried to the Peninsula General Hospital where he died.

Notice was given by R. D. Dashiell, Clerk of the Election Supervisors, that an election of the Town Commissioners would be held at the Court House on June 6, 1908.

W. H. Dashiell, examiner, was conducting a teacher's examination on Thursday, June 7. Preston P. Bloodworth received a new and excellent Lodge No. 17, Knights of Pythias from James E. Dashiell and Hampden Dashiell for 1-3/4 acres in Mt. Vernon for $100.00. John T. Warwick and Nancy Elizabeth Boston; Frank Williams and Annie Costen; Isaac Wilson and Edith Dennis and William F. Hall and Amanda S. Hall all received marriage licenses.

Dr. C. N. Wainwright rendered surgical aid to set a dislocated arm for little Nellie Packard.

J. F. Flurer was installing a cold-storage refrigerator for meats.

Princess Anne Milling Co. had just erected a new office on their property on Antioch Avenue.

At a special sale $10.00 suits were selling at $5.00 and $5.00 suits for $2.98; $1.20 shoes were 90c and callers at 3/4c a yard.

Hayman and Coston's soda fountain was catering "anything you feel like eating." Call Phone 16 for delivery.

W. T. Phoebus was "almost convalescent" after his illness. The Princess Anne Academy, an eastern branch of Maryland Agricultural College, held their Eighth Annual Commencement, May 26, at the Metropolitan Methodist Church.

Princess Anne was producing more roses than any town in Maryland. H. P. Dashiell was selling violet plants at 60c a dozen. Rev. W. H. Logan had the largest and finest variety of roses in town.

William A. Phoebus was the Orphan's Court Cryer and the Judges were John R. Bozman, E. E. Ward and E. W. Milia. Register of Wills was William F. Lankford.

McKinley was President. C. M. Dashiell was offering three cents a quart for strawberries for canning.

Oliver T. Beauchamp was Clerk of Court.

J. L. Mackin was the editor. In the files of this newspaper is a copy of the Somerset Journal for 1903; At that later date Edward H. Paul was the editor and publisher.

The copy announced that Wm. Dashiell was going to be the editor of a democratic newspaper. About this time "The Marylander" with Eph. G. Polk, editor and "The Somerset Herald" with C. W. Fontaine, editor had consolidated. Mr. Dashiell became the editor of The Marylander and Herald.

Good Weather Helps Local Church Services

Local pastors reported excellent attendance at Holy Week Services this past weekend. Beautiful spring weather helped make even the outdoor services a great success.

The Reverend Carroll Scott, president of the Princess Anne Ministerial Association and pastor of Metropolitan Methodist Church, was particularly pleased with the excellent turnout at the community union services. Attendance at the Good Friday Service was 127 and at the Sunrise Service, 176. The Ministerial Association wishes to express thanks to all who made these services possible.

Host church for the Good Friday Service was the Green Hill Church of the Brethren at Westover. Special thanks go to the Rev. Charles Lathem, host pastor, for his warm welcome; to the Brethren Choir for their fine presentations; to the Rev. Peter Hule, pastor of Manokin Presbyterian Church, for the sermon; and to the Brethren Ladies Auxiliary for presenting a fellowship hour after the service.

Appreciation is also expressed to the American Legion for permitting the use of their grounds for the annual Easter Sunrise Service, and especially to Owen Webster who took care of setting up the public address system. Thanks are further expressed to the Rev. Charles Huffman, pastor of Antioch Methodist Church, for the Sunrise Sermon; and to the Rev. Walter McLeod, pastor of First Baptist Church, for lending his teams in their fine musical presentations. The fellowship hour with coffee and donuts provided by the Ladies Auxiliary of the American Legion was also greatly appreciated.

SOMERSET COUNTY . . . IN THE SPRINGTIME.

The gentle warmth of the seasons first light southerly wind begins to stir the populace. The salty tang in the air, the cry of the herring gull, and the unmistakable odor of tarred nets heralds another Spring in Somerset. Little boys dig out their crab-nets, strip off their shirts and shoes and sneak off in quest of the seasons first crustaceans. Grown men become busy repairing their shanties, building their floats and readying their boats in anticipation of another record crabbing and fishing season.

For many generations the Bank of Somerset has annually watched the birth of Spring in Somerset County. It is an exhilarating and busy season, a time of year when the adage "Hope springs eternal in the human breast" seems to take on added meaning. For us at the Bank of Somerset it is also a time of reflection, a reflection on the past, present, and future. On the past with its nostalgic memories of those who chose our bank and helped it build a firm foundation. On the present with our many fine customers who are helping us grow into a tower of banking strength, and with joyous anticipation of the future in serving those who are yet to come.

Have you tried the Bank of Somerset yet? If not, why not stop into one of our three offices in Princess Anne or Crisfield. You will discover for yourself why so many are turning to us for all their banking needs. Bank of Somerset . . . We've got a lot to like.

Safty Week

The week of April 23 - 28 has been designated by Governor Mandel as School Bus Safty Week. In Somerset County at the present time there are 60 buses traveling approximately 3,000 miles a day to provide bus service for around 3500 students.

Mr. William Dykes, Supervisor of Transportation, urges the citizens of Somerset County to recognize this special week by commending school bus drivers for their safety records.

In addition Mr. Dykes urges all motorists to rededicate themselves to the promotion of school bus safety by observing school buses in operation, using safe driving practices and extreme caution in areas where buses are in operation. Remember at all times that our school buses transport our most precious commodity - the future citizens of Somerset County.

Teens Plan Trip

Mrs. Yvonne White, Youth Director of the Walker Memorial Church of God, announces that three members of their teen group are planning a trip to Cleveland, Tennessee, on Saturday. The teens are Beverly Bozman, Sandra Ford, and Morris Milbourne.

The main object of the trip, according to Mrs. White, is to spend a day on the campus of Lee College which is one of the denomination's liberal arts colleges. The trip is annually sponsored by the Delmarva Youth and Christian Education Board. Students are financially assisted by their local congregations.

Side trips also include a tour of the denomination's international headquarters and one of the denomination's orphanages. The teens, all students of Washington Hi, will leave on Friday morning by chartered bus and will return on Sunday evening.

His infectious laugh and sly attempts to get another drink, and his reminiscences of Billy the Kid make him a real show-stealer. He is in contrast to Edward Bell, the ex-writer and a familiar face to theater-goers, and in movies and on television, who plays Alan Squier. Mr. Bell did a superb interpretation of Alan, who has lost his zest for life and has no desire to live. On completion of the tour, he returns to Hollywood to star in Bill Gunn's new film "The Partisan."

Robert Chamberlain, as the gum-chewing ex-athlete, Boze, in love with Gabby, and his attempts at love making add much to the humor of the play. Pretty Jan Rothman was charmingly natural as Gabby and Carol Du Pont, property mistress, played the part of the Mexican cook to perfection.

The outlaws are convincingly played by Lane Smith as Duke Mantee, cold-blooded killer; Carl Schurr as Ruby, and Jon L. Feather as Pyles. The original Duke was played by Humphrey Bogart and the original Alan was Leslie Howard while Bette Davis had the leading female role.

Exciting, full of action, and dramatically well cast, "The Petrified Forest", as played by Center Stage, is a memorable production, well worth seeing.

An intensive year-round effort is being put forth by the Department of Natural Resources to promote safer hunting procedures and to reduce the risk involved in the handling of firearms.

The program began with the passage of a Maryland Joint Senate Resolution in May of 1966. The Resolution directed the old Department of Game and Inland Fish to initiate and promote a state-wide firearms and hunter safety program to instruct both young people and adults in firearms safety.

During the month of April the firearm safety program was presented to the students of the ninth grades of both Somerset and Crisfield Junior High Schools. This program was sponsored by the Somerset Board of Education and presented by the Department of Natural Resources Inland Division Officers. Students who complete the entire course are awarded Certificates of Competency and the Maryland Safe Hunter shoulder patch.

The program is now a part of the state school system, but firearms and hunter safety training is offered at certain grade levels in several county school systems. In other counties many individual schools also conduct firearms and hunter safety programs. Several other counties have displayed interest in establishing pilot training programs in one or more of their schools in the near future. Some schools have considered adding a safety program to their curriculum as an elective subject. Hunting accident charts and records that are maintained indicate that many, perhaps even the majority of hunting mishaps can be avoided. This is the purpose of the Maryland Firearms Safety Training Program.
